House of Islam, world faith vs. House of War

The events in Iran and other Moslem nations seem beyond comprehension. Following is the first of three articles by the brilliant anthropologist, Dr. Raphael Patai, that go far toward explaining them. Dr. Patai is the author of numerous books on the subject, including The Arab Mind and Society, Culture and Change in the Middle East. He has been professor of anthropology at the University of Pennsylvania, Ohio State, Fairleigh Dickinson and other universities.

By DR. RAPHAEL PATAI

First of all, let us set the facts straight. Not all the Moslems are Arabs and not all the Arabs are Moslems. The religion of the Moslems, Islam, is a world faith, with some 600 million adherents, who constitute the solid majority in 32 countries forming a broad global belt stretching halfway around the earth from the Atlantic coast of Africa to Pakistan, and from Central Asia to the Sahara. In this area, Islam is the religion of some 95 per cent of the population. Farther to the east, in Bangladesh and Indonesia, almost the entire population is Moslem.

The area controlled or dominated by Moslems for centuries has been referred to in Moslem tradition as "the House of Islam." Those parts of the world not ruled by Islam were and are called "the House of War."

These designations are significant because they indicate that in the traditional Moslem view the non-Moslem world comprised that part of mankind with which Islam was in a state of conflict, and which to conquer in a holy war, a "jihad," was one of the basic Moslem religious commandments.

Islam, founded by the Arabian Prophet Mohammed (570-632), is based on the "Five Pillars of the Faith": The witnessing of the oneness of Allah, five daily prayers, fasting in the month of Ramadham; pilgrimage to Mecca, and almsgiving. According to some, the jihad is the sixth pillar of Islam.

Of the three monotheistic religions — Judaism, Christianity and Islam — Islam is, on the whole, the one which is most able to infuse religious fervor and enthusiasm into its believers. It is the one which, while recognizing the great figures of the Old and New Testaments as prophets of God, most rigidly insists that it alone is the possessor of the true, complete and final revelation of Allah's will.

It is the only major religion which is so rigorously set against the adherents of all other faiths that it permits only Moslems to enter its holy shrine, the sacred mosque of the Ka'aba, and, indeed, excludes non-Moslems from the whole city of Mecca within which that sanctuary is situated. It is a faith which imparts to many more of its adherents an absolute conviction of rightness and an unshakeable belief in reward and punishment in the Other World, than do Judaism and Christianity.

It has had an unparalleled appeal to many races and cultures. It has converted millions of Turkic and Mongoloid peoples in Central Asia and in Southeast Asia, and is still spreading noticeably among Negroid peoples in Central Africa and elsewhere.

With the acquisition of billions by oil-wealthy Arab states, which are more than ever the central factor in the Moslem world, Islam has become a power the world increasingly will have to reckon with.

The Arabs, by their own definition, are those peoples who speak Arabic and who uphold the values of Arab traditions. They predominate across North Africa, the Arabian peninsula and in four states east of the Mediterranean: Syria, Lebanon, Jordan and Iraq.

The total population of the 21 Arab states which form the Arab League is about 160 million. Incidentally, they constitute one of the world areas with the highest natural increase.

While only about 27 per cent of all Moslems are Arabs, no less than 90 percent of all Arabs are Moslems. The rest are Christian Arabs, found primarily in Egypt (where they are known as Copts), and in Lebanon and Syria (where they are divided among many Christian sects).

In every Arab country, the Christian Arab minority has been more urbanized and better educated than the Moslem Arabs and, in recent decades, they have become more Westernized.

At the same time, the Christian Arabs have stood in the vanguard of the Arab nationalist movements in those Arab states which, until the end of the Second World War, had been under British, French, or Italian colonial rule.

The non-Arab Moslem world is vast and varied. The largest, that is, most populous Moslem countries are non-Arab and lie outside the Middle East. By far the largest Moslem population is that of Indonesia, some 90 per cent of whose 145 million inhabitants are Moslem. The second largest is Bangladesh, of whose 85 million inhabitants 85 per cent are Moslems.

Of the Middle Eastern non-Arab Moslem countries, the two most important are Turkey and Iran. Turkey, which in the past ruled over most of the Arab world, since the post-First World War reforms of Kemal Attaturk has become modernized, industrialized and Westernized to such an extent that it now proudly counts itself a European state. (In fact, a small corner of Turkey, with the city of Istanbul, lies in Europe.)

Turkey's population of 45 million is practically entirely Moslem, including some 2.5 million Kurds who live in the southeastern corner of Turkey. Another

Que. referendum wording drafted

QUEBEC (CP) — Premier Rene Levesque today presented the Quebec national assembly with the long-awaited wording of the sovereignty-association referendum.

Quebecers will be asked in next spring's vote to give the Quebec government a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association with the rest of Canada.

But voters have been assured that independence will not take place until the holding of a second referendum.

The question, unveiled by Premier Rene Levesque in the national assembly today, includes a three-paragraph preamble which says the Quebec government "has made public its proposal to negotiate a new agreement with the rest of Canada."

The agreement, the question continues, would "enable Quebec to acquire the exclusive power to make its laws, administer its taxes and establish relations abroad — in other words, sovereignty — and at the same time, to maintain with Canada an economic association including a common currency."

And in a key phrase, the preamble includes the following words: "Any change in political status resulting from these negotiations will be submitted to the people through a referendum."

It ends with the specific question: "On these terms, do you agree to give the government of Quebec the mandate to negotiate the proposed agreement between Quebec and Canada?"

The voters will be asked to respond with a Yes or No to the question.

The question will be subject to a 35-hour debate in the national assembly in February. The referendum itself will probably take place in May or June.

The wording has been the subject of long argument in Quebec, with some opinion polls saying the referendum response could change significantly with fairly minor variations in the text.

The 68-member Parti Quebecois caucus was consulted on the wording last week but as of Wednesday still hadn't been told what it would be.

Chaos looms for oil

Times News Services

CARACAS — The OPEC oil ministers wound up four frustrating days of negotiations today in a deadlock over a new price for the world's petroleum supply.

The OPEC deadlock could lead to a free-for-all in the world's petroleum market and push up world prices for the precious fuel as chaos continues on the world oil market.

On the basis of positions staked out by both moderate and radical countries at the conference, gasoline consumers around the world can expect to pay higher prices at the pump.

"We did not fix any price," Venezuelan oil minister Humberto Calderon said at the close of the final three-hour session.

Ahmed Zaki Yamani, oil minister of Saudi Arabia, the largest oil exporter in the world, said no progress had been made in the final round of talks.

Yamani said there was no general agreement on the OPEC price for crude oil.

Calderon, who presided over the sessions as host minister, said the oil industry now has no price standard or "marker crude" on which to base a price system.

"Everyone is free to charge what they see fit for the market,", Calderon said. "That situation is no good for us but we prefer this system to a multi-tier price system."

Marguerite stand-in not $½M, but $3M

Transportation Minister Alex Fraser has had some unpleasant financial facts dumped into his lap on the possibility of leasing a vessel to replace the Princess Marguerite in 1980.

After a two-week tour of European shipyards and ship brokers, B.C. Ferry Corp chief of operations George Baldwin has returned with a list of nine possible vessels to be used on the Seattle-Victoria run.

All nine are for sale but only two, both owned by the Stena Line of Sweden, are available for charter.

The cost of chartering is not $500,000 a year as Fraser recently estimated.

It is $3 million a year.

"As a matter of fact, I think the figure is a little higher than $3 million when you work out all the details, delivery costs and so forth," Fraser said today.

Cost of buying one of the ships outright ranges from $12 million to $25 million, Fraser said.

Baldwin reported to the B.C. Ferry Corp board of directors on Wednesday but no conclusion was reached on a replacement vessel.

Fraser said a final decision must be made by the end of January.

"At least now we have all the facts," the minister said.

CP pays $3M

TORONTO (CP) — CP Rail has paid about $3 million to Mississauga, Ont., evacuees who have claimed out-of-pocket expenses for the six days following a Nov. 10 train derailment of cars carrying chlorine and propane.

The company has honored about 16,000 claims covering about 50,000 people.

Who's gonna win the West?

Canadian Press

The country's political leaders have converged on Western Canada, anxious to impress upon voters there the importance each attaches to the region in the campaign leading up to the Feb. 18 election. (More detailed election coverage appears today on pages 28 and 29).

Pierre Trudeau was in Winnipeg today trying to make good on his promise to make the four western provinces more at home within the Liberal party by inaugurating his fifth election campaign in that city.

In Vancouver, Prime Minister Clark continued his western swing with a board of trade speech outling Conservative government thinking on the best way to turn over the assets of Petro-Canada, the state oil company, to the private sector.

Clark was also told today that Eldon Woolliams, veteran Progressive Conservative MP passed over by Prime Minister Clark when he made up his first cabinet, will not run in the Feb. 18 election.

Ed Broadbent, leader of the New Democratic Party, was also due in Winnipeg to address high school students before flying to Vancouver.

Trudeau is making his first campaign appearance with a group of Prairie Liberals meeting to thrash out an election strategy for the West.

The Trudeau-led Liberals elected only three MPs west of Ontario during the May 22 election and the former prime minister says he is determined to show the West the Liberals care about its problems.

The Liberals lost two familiar faces Wednesday when both James Jerome and Donald Macdonald announced that they would not be running.

Broadbent spent Wednesday hammering away at the Clark government's energy policies, especially their effect on Quebec and Atlantic Canada.

Socred staff to be replaced

Social Credit party caucus head Jack Kempf said Wednesday he has started accepting applications for a new caucus research team to start work before the spring session of the legislature.

Earlier this month, Kempf fired the entire research staff and announced that he and his fellow Socred MLAs had decided unanimously to "restructure and reorganize support staff responsibility" in the government's caucus office.

The research function, as such, he said, was being phased out.

Kempf denied at the time the mass firing had anything to do with the "dirty tricks" affair which involved some research workers advising Socred party members to fake letters to newspapers.

It's not known if former researchers Ellen McKay and Jack Kelly, who figured prominently in the letters case, will be applying for jobs.

Kempf said Wednesday speculation that the top research job would pay $40,000 a year is just a rumor.

New blow for ferry union

The strife-torn 2,700-member B.C. Ferry and Marine Workers Union has been dealt another blow with the resignation of Tsawwassen chairman Steve Lomax who represents 350 members in the union's largest local.

Lomax said Wednesday he quit because he could no longer act under the leadership of president Shirley Mathieson.

His resignation is the latest in a two-year history of internal struggles involving top union officials and members of the executive.

In an attempt to salvage union unity, the union has asked the Canadian Labor Congress to place it under trusteeship.

Lomax's resignation leaves tw... ...nion's largest units without local representation. Robin Holmgren, Departure Bay chairman, was dismissed by a majority of the executive for suspected involvement in a Sept. 6 unauthorized work stoppage which the provincial Labor Relations Board is currently investigating.

Holmgren says the constitution provides that only the membership of the local can remove a chairman and he wants a vote of confidence from the local membership.

Lomax said Ms. Mathieson has forced the union down a road of chaos because she refused to wo... ...with many executive members.

"We are in total chaos and she led us down that route. She created it by refusing to work with executive members. As soon as anyone questions union direction they are classed as dissidents," he said.

Ms. Mathieson says much of the union's internal bickering is caused by business agent Matt Brown, who she said ran an unsuccessful slate during the last convention in February.

A 15-member committee is caning for a special convention to enable members to reaffirm their support in the existing union leadership. The group says it has collected more than 700 names on a petition calling for a convention to be held next spring, one year earlier than scheduled. The union constitution says at least one third of the membership has to support a special convention before one can be called.

Chimney safety boost

Manufacturers of metal chimneys have made three commitments to purchasers after warnings from the provincial fire commissioner that their products might be unsafe.

The action, which also includes safety guidelines, came after fire commissioner Gordon Anderson withdrew his approval of the chimneys if they are used for solid-fuel fires such as wood or coal.

Anderson said he was concerned the type A metal chimneys would not stand up to solid fuel fires because of heat from creosote residue (through neglect in having the chimneys cleaned regularly) and through corrosion of the metal by chemicals in the creosote or materials burned.

Now, the Association of British Columbia Fireplace Manufacturers and Distributors has undertaken to supply radiation shields to wood stove owners, where needed; replace pipes that have corroded or have insufficient insulation, and assist the fire commission in supplying proper information on installation and maintenance of their products.

The advertisement is a result of discussions between the association and Anderson, who reinstated his approval when the association agreed to his terms, as listed in the ad.

In advertisements now appearing in newspapers, a number of recommendations are given for safe operation of wood- and coal-burning stoves and fireplaces.

Safety guidelines include inpection of chimneys for corrosion and warping and to act when damage is found; buy only units and materials which have been tested and approved; ensure units are installed and operated according to instructions from manufacturers; that chimneys are cleaned at least twice a year; that only dry, seasoned wood is used (no ocean driftwood which causes corrosion), and that only approved modifications be done to units.

Snapped cable to delay Yule calls

Victorians planning their usual phone calls to friends and relatives overseas this Christmas will have more than the usual trouble getting a free line.

Teleglobe Canada reported Wednesday in Montreal that one of its largest transatlantic submarine cables has broken, reducing overseas line capacity by 20 per cent.

The 1,840-circuit cable Cantat 2 broke at 1.30 p.m. PST Tuesday in an area southwest of Ireland which was buffeted by severe winter storms, a Teleglobe spokesman said.

The break affects calls from across Canada destined for Europe, as well as to Africa through Europe, and repairs may take up to a week depending on the weather.

Hands off BCR strike

Labor Minister Jack Heinrich will not — for the time being — use essential services legislation to flag down the B.C. Railway strike despite considerable pressure to do so.

The minister said Wednesday his mediation officials have been in contact with both sides and added: "There is every indication that the parties want to go back to the bargaining table."

"They certainly do not want third-party intervention," he added.

The strike began Tuesday night after the joint council of rail unions refused to negotiate on the railway's proposal to cut down the size of train crews.

The strike, in its second day, has cut rail service to many Interior communities that rely on B.C. Rail and the stoppage has brought demands for imposition of the Essential Service Disputes Act.

The act would impose a 90-day cooling-off period in the dispute, which company officials say is costing the province at least $1 million a day.

Heinrich is ignoring pressure from within his own caucus to invoke the act.

Socred MLA Jack Kempf, representing Omenica, appealed to the minister as another northern member.

"The momentous impact that a strike of any length will have on the economy of north-central B.C. is impossible to comprehend," Kempf wrote.

"In one community alone, the community of Fort St. James, in excess of 1,000 jobs will soon be in jeopardy."

Union spokesman Norm Farley said the Council of Rail Unions will not resume contract talks until the company decides to retain current manning levels, the main hurdle to a settlement.

Police drive in on assault

A Victoria police patrol car was in the right place at the right time and as a result a 22-year-old man is in custody following an assault on a woman early today.

A police spokesman said an officer was driving in the 900-block Gordon at 1:40 a.m. when he saw a woman struggling with a man.

The man ran off as the officer approached but was captured a short distance away.

The spokesman said two women, both in their early 20s, were walking home when a man came up from behind and grabbed one of them around the neck.

The suspect is to appear in provincial court charged with assault with intent.

Justifying the election

VANCOUVER — Well, let's see if I've got this straight now.

The reason we are going into an election, from a Social Credit point of view, is that five Socred MPs — paid some $41,300 to represent their constituents' point of view in the House of Commons — refused to have any views one night last week.

By betraying the people who elected them and refraining from voting, the five Socreds from Quebec helped to bring down the Tory government.

These same five parliamentary eunuchs are now going back to those same voters and asking that they be returned to Ottawa so they can speak their voice. Get it?

The reason we are going into an election, from an NDP point of view, is that the sanctimonious party set in motion the game of political chicken by moving non-confidence in John Crosbie's budget.

Crobie's sin is that he told Canadians, who have for years been shielded from the energy prices borne by other nations, that they would have to start paying a realistic price. Got that?

Mr. Crosbie also suggested that we cannot go on printing money, indefinitely, as the Liberals did to stay in power, and that the country had to face reality. For that outrageous talk, he had to be defeated. Right? Now you're getting it.

The reason we're going into an election is because the NDP in this past parliament, had the brightest and youngest caucus it has had in Ottawa for at least 15 years.

Among its 27 members, it had great potential in such newcomers from British Columbia as Svend Robinson, Ian Waddell and Pauline Jewett. There was Bill Blaikie from Winnipeg, Bob Ogle and Lorne Nystrom from Saskatchewan. The brilliant young Bob Rae from Toronto, a leader for the future, plus the persistent Cyril Symes, who consistently tied Energy Minister Ray Hnatyshyn in knots. There's Fonse Faour from Newfoundland.

The NDP, not content with this, helped force an election in which they stand a good chance of losing one-third of that promising caucus. Get the logic?

The reason we are going into an election, from a Conservative point of view, is that Joe Clark was puttering along in better fashion than most journalists give him credit for, learning his job and mastering his French so that he became the first Tory leader since Job to be able to have a presence in Quebec.

Because he was given only a minority by the Canadian public, Clark boasted that he would govern as if he had a majority.

The only way he could maintain that "majority" was to court the support of Fabien Roy's Socreds. To help in this task, Clark refused for six months to even talk to Roy just once. This helped a lot.

Get it? Got it? good.

The reason we're going into an election, from a Liberal point of view, is that the leader of the Liberals, who was soundly rejected by the voters last time, had already announced he was quitting.

Buoyed by this news, and having already set a date for a leadership convention to pick a successor, the party then persisted in bringing on an election which will be held at a date six weeks before aforesaid leadership convention. Get the thinking? Right on.

So persistent were these clear-minded Liberals in what they were doing that they even hauled one of their spear carriers — victim of a hernia operation — out of a hospital bed so he could participate in this exercise in Aristotelian logic.

Having cut their own throats, in color on national TV, and having frightened away any sane aspirants who might consider returning to this fold of philosophers, they then decided to get into the election with a leader who says he doesn't really want to be leader. You still with us?

Further, he announces that even if elected he doesn't plan to hang around for long. So voters are being asked to vote for someone who isn't very enthusiastic and even if he wins will pass the shaky torch off to some anonymous benefactor the public doesn't know about.

Finally, the same recycled leader plans to win the election in Western Canada which under his previous rule fell from 27 Liberal seats to two seats because of the policy of the party he led.

Got it all? That's why we're going into an election. The Rhinocerous Party is going to have trouble competing with all this.

Iran revolution is a religious one

3 million Kurds live in Iraq and Iran. Wherever they live, the Kurds constitute a rebellious ethnic-linguistic-national minority, bent on independence.

Iran, which has been so much in the news lately, occupies a special position in the Moslem world. It is the only Moslem country which has adopted (from the 16th century on) Shi'ite Islam as the state religion, and in which the overwhelming majority of the population (30 million out of 35 million) is Shi'ite.

In neighboring Iraq, two-thirds of the population is Shi'ite, but the dominant element is Sunni, Islam's majority sect; in North Yemen, the population is about evenly divided between Shi'ites and Sunnis, and in Lebanon the Shi'ites constitute about 30 per cent of the total population, as against 27 per cent Sunnis and 40 per cent Christians. In all other Moslem countries, including all the remaining 18 Arab states, amost the entire population is Sunni Moslem.

The differences between the Sunnis and the Shi'ites are historical, doctrinal and temperamental. Historically, the split between the two sects came about after the death of Ali, the cousin and son-in-law of the Prophet Mohammed, who was recognized by all the Moslems as their caliph (literally "vicar," that is, of Mohammed), but whom his closest followers held to be also the first imam, that is, supreme spiritual and temporal leader of the faithful.

When Ali's son Husayn was killed in the battle of Kerbela (on the 10th of Muharram, 680), the split between the party of Ali, the Shi'ites, and the Sunnis became unbridgeable. The Shi'ites considered Yazid the murderer of the saintly Husayn, while the Sunnis recognized Yazid and his successors as caliphs and heads of the "Mohammaden community."

The Shi'ites held Ali and his descendants, who were the offspring of the prophet through his daughter Fatima, to be the only rightful imams.

Soon the Shi'ites, in turn, split into various sects, of which the largest and most influential remained the one which believed in 12 imams, the last one of whom, Mohammed al-Mahdi, did not die but became hidden (in 940) and is expected to return to usher in an age of Messianic bliss.

This is the sect which is the dominant and, since the latest plebiscite held two weeks ago, the official state religion of Iran.

This sect was infused with a conviction of superiority vis-a-vis "the House of War," which conviction, when shattered by Napoleon (who conquered Egypt in 1798) and subsequent European invaders and colonizers, turned into a fierce hatred of the "infidel."

The historical origin of the Shi'ites, on the other hand, was rooted in defeat, tragedy and martyrdom. Ever since the battle of Kerbela, they felt the hand of the Sunni majority raised against them, ready to strike them down, or at least to oppress them.

Historical conditions brought it about that they felt it necessary to include the strategem of "dissimulation" in their doctrinary arsenal, meaning that when necessary or merely expedient, they were allowed, even commanded, to pose as non-Shi'ites, in most cases as Sunnis, in order to gain their ends.

On the other hand, to become a martyr of one's faith meant but to emulate the noble example of the founder of the Shi'a, the Imam Husayn, who died a martyr's death at the hand of his Sunni enemies.

From the 18th Century on, Iranian poetry, frequently memorized and orally recited to enthusiastic audiences, extolled the virtues of martyrdom. To this day, there is a latent readiness, amounting almost to a yearning, in the Iranian psyche to suffer martyrdom, which, incidentally, is considered the surest road to Paradise.

A telling example of this abiding proclivity was supplied as recently as Dec. 4 in an open letter written by Iran's Boy Scouts and published in the Tehran newspaper Islamic Republic, which stated:

"We, the Iranian Boy Scouts, want to tell the world that if there is an attack on us we are all ready to choose the most honorable path of martyrdom. If we are attacked, the attack will be an unequal and dastardly one, but in our tradition death is an inevitable truth and martyrdom is determination of destiny."

While martyrdom is the privilege of only a select few, all can engage in severe and bloody forms of mortification of the flesh in memory of the ancient, martyred founding fathers. Hence, the processions of the 10th of Muharram in which tens of thousands would repeatedly and rhythmically strike their own foreheads with upraised swords until their faces and white gowns would flow with blood.

In the most recent of three commemorations of Husayn's martyrdom, which took place but a few weeks ago, iron chains were substituted for the swords, lest the world, as the Iranian leaders put it, think them practising cruel and barbarous rites.

The doctrine of the hidden imam has introduced an element of enormous psychological leverage into the Shi'ite mind. Although the 12th imam has remained in concealment, he continues to live on Earth and may reappear any moment in the person of the mahdi, the divinely guided master. When Ayatollah Khomeini was acclaimed imam by his followers, they stopped but one step short from recognizing him as the 12th imam, or mahdi.

What is happening these days in Iran must be recognized as more than the Persian variant of such social revolutions as the 18th Century witnessed in France or the 20th in Russia.

It is a highly explosive religious movement, a new mahdi'ism, which has already begun to evoke a fervent response among Shi'ite communities scattered in Arab lands.

It is expressive of the long-suppressed Shi'ite desire to prove their mettle against their hereditary enemies, the Sunni Arabs, and to assert the superiority of Shi'ite Islam to the infidel, "devilish" Christian world.

Regrettable as the involvement of the United States is, from the point of view of this new Iranian mahdi'ism, anti-Americanism is merely an incidental by-product of what for Shi'ism are the convulsions ushering in a new Moslem messianic era.

Europe helps tighten cash squeeze on Iran

Times News Services

A credit squeeze on Iran, which was quietly agreed to by the United States' European allies during Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's whirlwind tour of Europe last week, is beginning to click into place, administration officials said in Washington Wednesday.

Britain, France, West Germany, Italy and other allies consulted by Vance were asked to cut off new credits to Iran, slow down the renewal of existing credits and apply banking rules to the letter so that loans would be declared in default if Iran missed a payment by so much as a day or two, according to sources involved in Vance's mission.

Economic analysts believe that, taken all together, "the coordinated and cumulative effect will be substantial," one official said.

On another front, the White House said Wednesday that President Carter had agreed to delay for a few days his expected decision on whether to seek United Nations sanctions against Iran while Secretary General Kurt Waldheim continued talks with newly appointed Iranian representatives to the world organization.

Privately, U.S. officials said they did not expect that Waldheim's direct talks in New York with Mansour Farang, the new Iranian ambassador, or his occasional telephone conversations with Iranian Foreign Minister Sadegh Ghotbzadeh, would make any headway toward freeing the 50 American hostages being held by Iranian students occupying the U.S. Embassy in Tehran.

Carter is known to believe that a key imponderable in winning Security Council action is the attitude of the Soviet Union. Ambassador Anatoly F. Dobrynin, who was warned by Vance nearly two weeks ago that a Soviet veto would be regarded seriously, was in Moscow for consultations and not expected back with an answer for at least another week.

Meanwhile, in Tehran, militant students ruled today that relatives will not be allowed to visit 50 American hostages at Christmas even though the Iranian government said it hoped such a humanitarian gesture might be arranged.

But they said they had begun to distribute the first of several hundred thousand Christmas cards from the United States sent to the hostages.

And in Panama City, hundreds of Panamanian students ignored a government ban on demonstrations and for the fourth time in two days protested the deposed shah of Iran's stay on Contadora Island.

Witnesses said several persons were beaten by guards swinging pieces of rubber hose, wooden nightsticks and pieces of cane, but none appeared severely injured.

Regional functions

The Capital Regional District has had its problems the past couple of years, to be sure, and local municipalities are perhaps not to be blamed if they don't trust the regional board overly much.

All the same, Oak Bay municipal council appears to be taking matters a little far when it refuses to make decisions on issues that are obviously of regional concern, just because the CRD board happens to be involved in them.

Two examples arose this week. Oak Bay council refused to participate in a regional study of recreation planning, and it refused, as it has done for the past month, to deal with the issue of turning the Economic Development Commission over to the region.

The study of recreational planning, it may be noted, was initiated not by the regional board but by Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe. Everyone who has watched during the past decade while the various municipalities competed with each other to build bigger, better and more expensive swimming pools, curling rinks and tennis bubbles knows there is an obvious need for some planning on a regional basis.

Yet council refused to endorse the idea because the CRD might somehow gain some additional power. Ald. Shirley Dowell, Oak Bay's representative on the regional board and a recent candidate for its chairmanship, led the move to oppose the study. She is, she said, "so afraid of anything that the regional board gets its hands on. Ultimately they may take away control of our recreational facilities."

This is, quite simply, errant nonsense. Under current legislation, the regional board cannot take on any new major functions without a change in its letters patent. And the municipal councils are required to approve all requests for changes in the letters patent.

Ironically, it is because of just that requirement that Oak Bay is so successfully holding up the move to bring the economic development commission under regional auspices. Its stalling on the issue means that the necessary change in the letters patent cannot very well go ahead.

Yet it is quite obvious that Oak Bay may well be cutting off its nose to spite its face. It can indeed keep the CRD from taking over the commission, but that may well mean the death of the commission altogether. Oak Bay residents, along with the rest of Greater Victoria, would then suffer the results of that death.

Oak Bay has to face the fact that some functions are regional functions. It makes no sense for municipalities to try to handle them on an individual basis.

And if the current regional body, the CRD, is not handling them well, the solution is to seek change from within, not to try to stymie the entire regional process.

Something to celebrate

In a world that is hard pressed for good news, the decision to sign a ceasefire to end the Rhodesia civil war has come at an appropriate time of year.

Negotiations between the two leaders of guerilla forces and Bishop Abel Muzorewa began some three months ago. Although threatened with total collapse at times, the talks continued until a new constitution based on black majority rule had been hammered out and the provisions for disarmament settled.

The London Conference resulted in drastically reduced rights for Rhodesia's white minority and provision was made for British supervision until the election early next year of a new parliament. The armed forces of both Rhodesia and the guerillas will be confined to camps to be supervised by soldiers from Commonwealth countries.

While much credit must go to the perserverence of Rhodesian participants the role played by the British mediators lead by Lord Carrington cannot be overstated, both in terms of the outcome and as an example of the way a peace process can be handled.

To bring together parties that had been warring for seven years and reach a compromise for peace that appears to have a chance of lasting success, was no small deed. The process of negotiation used here should stand as a model to other nations seeking to halt warfare.

The Rhodesian ceasefire could come at no better time than when much of the world is exclaiming the virtues of peace and goodwill towards others.

JAMES RESTON

Thatcher: time for action

NEW YORK — In her first and all too brief visit to the United States as prime minister of Great Britain, Margaret Thatcher gave the political leaders of this country a few things to consider.

To begin with, she demonstrated by her speech to the Foreign Policy Association here in New York that the art of political speech is not dead. This we had begun to doubt. But nobody who heard her here or in Washington, including those who reject her conservative philosophy, could question her ability to use the English language to reduce the diversity and complexity of contemporary problems to a clear identity and to command the attention and respect of her audiences.

Second, she reminded us that it is possible to face the perplexities of the 1970s and what she called "the dangerous decade" of the '80s with serenity and even with hope.

Need for unity

The challenges to our security and to our way of life in the coming 10 years, she said, may be more acute than in the '70's, but the leaders of the Western nations would need to be firm, calm and united.

"Neither weakness, nor anger nor despair will serve us," she observed. "The problems are daunting, but in my view there is ample reason for optimism."

Thatcher has been in office for only seven months. She has clearly not had time to prove that her policies — tight monetary control, reduced government spending, cutting income taxes, raising some sales taxes sharply, abolishing government wage guidelines and dividend controls etc. — will actually work.

In fact, inflation is now running in Britain at 17-20 per cent. The basic government interest rate is now at 17 per cent, mortgages are now costing over 15 per cent, and while the new prime minister campaigned as the friend of small entrepreneurs, the borrowing rate for small businesses in Britain is now almost at the 20 per cent level.

These are sobering facts, which outrage the socialists and even trouble many Tories, but it was the spirit of Thatcher's lectures here that impressed many American listeners who have lately been bewildered by the ambiguities of our own presidential campaign rhetoric.

"The last 10 years have not been a happy period for the Western democracies, domestically or internationally," Mrs. Thatcher said. "Self-questioning is essential to the health of any society. But we have perhaps carried it too far — and carried to extremes, it causes paralysis. The time has come when the West — above all Europe and the United States — must begin to substitute action for introspection."

Listening to her bold confidence and even determination, one could not help remembering the distinction between the British parliamentary system and the American presidential system.

Thatcher has a reliable 43-member majority in the House of Commons. She can insist on support of that majority to transform her policies into law, at least in the early years of her five-year term. Only some spectacular disaster is likely to bring her down (though this can happen, as the new Canadian prime minister, Joe Clark, discovered after only six months in office).

President Carter, however, with much larger majorities in the House and Senate in Washington, cannot count on or compel the support of his fellow Democratic members under the U.S. system. Mrs. Thatcher agreed here that she had the votes and the time to work her way.

At home her objectives are quite clear:

— Less state intervention in Britain's economic and social life.

— More emphasis on the role and responsibility of the individual for the nation's wealth and welfare.

— Renewed emphasis on the idea of freedom and the rule of law.

— Emphasis on the sovereignty of Parliament, rather than on the power of the unions as expressed in recent years.

Abroad Thatcher insisted that it was "time for action" in the '80s, in order: to restore the dynamic to our economies in the West; to modernize the West's defenses; to continue to seek agreement with the Soviet Union and its satellites; to help the developing countries to help themselves; to work together to improve the world economy through our international trading and financial institutions; to conserve our resources of energy, and to achieve an understanding with the oil producers in such a way that they and all other countries are benefited.

Mocks Soviet system

She was eloquent in her support of President Carter's policy in Iran and highly critical, almost defiant and mocking, of the Soviet system, and she emphasized her theme by quoting Walt Whitman at the end of her New York speech:

"It takes struggles in life to make strength; it takes fight for principles to make fortitude; it takes crisis to give courage and singleness of purpose to reach an objective."

Having paid tribute to Whitman's ideals, she concluded:

"Let us go down in history as the generation which not only understood what needed to be done but again had the strength, the self discipline and the resolve to see it through. That is our generation, that is our task for the Eighties!"

RICHARD GWYN

Trudeau is now a sad figure

OTTAWA — Once, most of us looked up to Pierre Elliot Trudeau. He had his flaws and he had his failures, as which of us doesn't, but he brought with him certain qualities, of intellect, of sensibility, of courage and of an almost idealistic belief in reason, that are quite uncommon in the nitty gritty and in the cut-and-thrust of political life.

It is difficult to look at Trudeau now without wanting to look the other way. The sight is sad; it is also a bit sickening. Despite all his talents, he's become a marginal and an expendable political personality.

Amid the cynicism and the ego, it is hard now to spot the sensibility and the courage. Trudeau's intellect is as fine an instrument as ever, but the purposes to which it is put more often now are manipulative rather than analytical. As for truth, reason's foundation, it has become to Trudeau a gimmick — a mechanical toy to be wound up and sent lurching off in whichever direction happens to be convenient.

Trudeau's flip-flop makes it harder for him to take the offensive.

Power coarsens

Power doesn't necessarily corrupt, as Lord Acton predicted long ago. Instead, it inevitably coarsens. To look at Trudeau these days is to find in him the images of other politicians coarsened by power — the late Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, former Newfoundland Premier Joey Smallwood — all convinced that it was the duty of their country or province to keep them in power, and convinced therefore that it was their "duty" — a word Trudeau used lavishly at his press conference — always to seek power.

In the election game to which we'll all be spectators for the next two months, Trudeau will be scored against for his "flip-flop" in returning as leader three weeks after announcing he was resigning to allow someone else to "rebuild" the Liberal Party.

Trudeau's flip-flop (he invented the phrase) will make it far harder for him to continue to attack Prime Minister Joe Clark for his flip-flops on policies and on election promises.

This is standard election fare. Indeed, events may have forced Trudeau to change his mind. He does seem to have defeated the government without realizing the near-impossibility of the Liberals picking a new leader in mid-campaign. The Liberal caucus' demand for him to return does seem to have been overwhelming, although exministers such as Jean Chretien and Judd Buchanan opposed it, as did the B.C. caucus, while the Manitoba caucus abstained on the vote.

Instead, the new coarseness to Trudeau showed itself in matters that are much more central to his political character — his sense of his family; his vision of the country.

Take national unity. Near the end of last May's campaign, Trudeau was at one and the same time at his worst as a politician, and at his best as a person. Against the unanimous advice of his aides, Trudeau spoke out repeatedly about national unity, about Canada, and about the constitution, which he promised to patriate at a special Parliamentary session right after the election.

In this election, Trudeau will be at his best as a politician, and at his worst as a person. Because Canadians are bored with the subject, he won't talk about national unity. He won't, "seek a mandate" to patriate the constitution, because "the referendum is near". Out go Trudeau's political beliefs; in comes the mechanical toy.

The children next. He'd resigned, to have more time with his sons Trudeau said three weeks ago. He planned to move to Montreal so they could learn French.

Justin, Sacha, and Charles-Michel, will have to wait. In the meantime — out comes the mechanical toy again — they can play their political parts. Had he asked them about his decision to run again, Trudeau was asked? Only Michel, Trudeau replied, who said, "Daddy, put on your running shoes."

One other aspect to Trudeau's presentation of himself saddened. A decade ago, he gave us bilingualism; today, he gives us Newspeak, out of George Orwell's novel, 1984, in which words no longer mean anything, or if they do mean anything mean the opposite of what they say ("peace means war", "Love means hate", wrote Orwell).

It's Newspeak

Three weeks ago, in French and English Trudeau told us he was resigning: "I am not the mean to rebuild the Liberal Party and negotiate a new federalism during the next decade". Yesterday, in Newspeak, Trudeau told us it was his "duty" to stay. He told us as well that even if he wins he will leave "well before" the next election; in Newspeak, this means that he may actually leave then, or that he may stay on four years to fight the next election, or that, a few months after winning the election and thus proving that Canadians were wrong to have defeated him, he may quit and use an excuse a victory in the Quebec referendum.

There's one drawback to Newspeak. Once you understand it, you understand something else: Nothing the speaker says needs to be believed, nor does he believe any of it himself. To be able to say this about Trudeau, who once believed so passionately in reason, is the saddest thing of all.

Does anyone care?

After watching the CBC TV presentation Arctic Oil hosted by David Suzuki I thought, 'what extraordinary people we Canadians are!' We allow our tax dollars to finance Dome Petroleum in its search for oil and gas and we don't get one cent back! Ten to one what we will get is a disaster resulting from an oil spill or blow-out. The wildlife will be destroyed, never to return. There is no second chance. Do we care?

Consider the Alaska Highway Gas Pipeline planned to transport natural gas from Prudhoe Bay in Alaska to the U.S.A. Canadians don't get a smell of the stuff. There is talk of huge sums of money and high employment for Canadians. Sheer nonsense. All that will happen is a typical northern boom and bust situation. All Canadians get out of the pipeline, if built, is a nine foot wide ditch dug by huge machines through a wilderness that will never recover from the on-slaught. Do we care?

To discuss what happens to the natives in the northern areas where all this so called development is supposed to happen is to open up a can of worms the governments and the big multinationals would rather leave tight shut. Ask members of Project North, they know something about the native concerns, and they care.

It is high time we demanded of the oil companies a few words about what they have done for Canada. We all know they have done darn well for themselves. We might also say to our governments: "How much longer do we dance to the tunes chosen by a few multinational oil companies?"

If you want to know more and learn a few facts that big companies and governments don't want to mention — join Project North. If you feel like helping yourself by putting up some sort of fight for right — join Project North. And, if you would like to be well informed on a regular basis, join Canadian Arctic Resources Committee. — A. M. Jardine, Project North, Victoria.

Halt sales push

Good news came for Victoria on Dec. 4, and bad news the next day. The good news: Beer production was slowed up due to a bottle shortage. The bad news: The Liquor Distribution Branch plans its 15th store for the Capital Region, on Quadra, beside a supermarket.

It is scandalous that the LDB acts as though it had a duty to press alcohol on the public, and maximize revenue, at no matter what cost to the community. The region is already oversupplied with liquor stores. With about half the population, we have two-thirds of Vancouver's 22 stores, and the sales from one of them is second highest in B.C.

Another store means another attack on the consumer's pay cheque, competing with groceries and our economic wellbeing. Children and family will lose out; taxes, education costs, transportation and debts will be harder to pay. Liquor sales will rise, the LDB will gain, and the liquor industry will succeed better in raiding the public purse.

Worthwhile compensation might result if only the bottle shortage can last long enough to cut seriously into beer production. There is no way Christmas can suffer from any alcohol shortage. While regretting any unemployment, one recognizes that money spent on the booze business really creates unemployment, since the same amount spent on almost anything else creates several times more jobs.

There is no shortage in the supply of water or the bacteria of decay that aid in the destruction of the barley and other foods diverted from the hungry world's food resources; well over fifty million tons of grain, plus fruits of many kinds fall prey to the heavy hand of alcohol production.

The LDB should be aiding the Attorney-General's Counter-Attack drinking and driving, and the health ministry's appeals for cutting down on alcohol consumption, instead of adding to their problems by its expansionary policy. Let that board join also in the policy of restriction.

I call on all provincial and municipal officials, whether elected or appointed, to examine this very serious situation which allows millions of dollars to be drained from our general economy, and act to protect the community's true interest by demanding that the Liquor Distribution Branch cease pushing sales here, and all over the province, as they are doing. — Harold T. Allen, 2140 Kings Road.

Bad timing

Now it is back to the drawing table.

No doubt Mr. Crosbie had the best intention when he put his budget together, but what he did not take into account was, all his "Savory Goodies" would have come into effect just before Christmas, just at the beginning of winter, at the beginning of the unemployment season.

I wish this gentleman would have taken psychology lessons before accepting the finance portfolio, or for that matter, before entering politics. — Esther Diegel, Victoria.

'Save Amazon forest'

THE ECONOMIST

An almost complete reversal of Brazil's policy of "opening up" the country's share of the 2-million-square-mile Amazon forest is being urged by a government-appointed committee. The committee's report recommends that no more forest land should be leased to companies, and that about 600,000 square miles should be designated as national parks and ecological reserves and 300,000 square miles as national forests.

Although powerful interests will oppose this drastic change of policy, it is likely to have strong support from President Figueiredo. He lost no time in setting up the forest policy committee when he took office in March, and since then he has created three new national parks in the Amazon region. Previous Brazilian governments' ambitious attempts to open up the forest led to spectacular failures, primarily because the belief that the soil was prodigiously fertile has proved to be false.

The Amazon tributaries have been found to be almost as pure as distilled water, showing that the soil of the region contains hardly any nutrients for plants. The exuberant vegetation is produced by a closed system of recycling, the nutrients from decaying vegetation being re-absorbed into the tree roots without creating a deep fertile topsoil. Up to half the rainfall is provided by evaporation from the tropical forest itself.

So neither cattle ranches nor small farms have prospered. Between 1966 and 1976 the official Amazon development agency, Sudam, approved the setting up (mainly by businessmen from Sao Paulo) of 354 ranches with an average size of 50,000 acres. Fortunes were made from the lavish tax rebates granted to the cattle companies. But many of them have found that the African grasses they planted on the cleared forest land grew less well after the first few years, and that they faced huge outlays on fertilizer and on remedies for soil leaching and poisonous weeds.

Sudam itself has become alarmed at the harmful impact of the process it initiated. It has approved only four new cattle projects since 1976. In 1976, too, the government abandoned the colonization program that was to have settled 1 million families alongside the 3,000-mile Transamazon highway, built in 1970. Only about 6,000 families had moved into the region as official settlers. However, hundreds of thousands of unofficial ones have swarmed in along the new road, squatting on virgin forest land held by absentee landowners. Only a few of the consequent conflicts were reported in the press, but hundreds of squatters have been killed while resisting eviction and many thousands had to leave.

It is estimated that about a tenth of Brazil's Amazon forest has already been cut down, and that destruction is still occurring at a rate of about 400 square miles a year. The unprecedented six-week drought in Manaus this year was probably the first sign of climatic change caused by the clearing of forest near that town. The destruction of the greater part of the world's biggest remaining area of tropical forest would not only transform the local climate but also affect that of the whole planet, by leading to a massive injection of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere. It has been calculated that, after allowing for half of this carbon dioxide to be absorbed by the oceans, the world total would increase by at least eight per cent. This would be additional to the rise of about 16 per cent caused during the past century by the destruction of forests and the burning of coal and oil.

World bankers in tizzy over U.S. 'freeze' of Iran assets

By ALEX BRUMMER
Manchester Guardian

When the hostages are set free and the crisis with Iran is over, President Carter's biggest single mistake in his handling of the whole affair could be his decision to freeze $8 billion of Iranian assets held by U.S. financial institutions.

As a political act, designed to demonstrate to the American people the country's determination not to be bullied, its impact was fairly short-lived and minimal. As an economic move it could prove disastrous.

It sent the international banking community into a frenzy of expensive, beggar-thy-neighbor legal activities. It has almost certainly done damage to New York's future as a major financial centre. It has created a nagging doubt about the value of the dollar in the foreign exchange markets. It could damage America's financial relations with some of its European allies and Japan.

Perhaps most significantly, it risks sending the world into a dark and damaging recession because of the inability of the financial system to absorb the OPEC countries' oil surpluses.

In the first instance the assets freeze has triggered off an unseemly scramble among the international banks to get their hands on Iran's assets. This battle has intensified as a result of Iran's apparent decision to stop making payments on its debts, although there has been some confusion about that as well.

Be that as it may, the American banks have shown themselves at their worst. Within hours of the U.S. government's blocking Iranian assets, Citibank and other major U.S. banks began engaging in the dubious legal practice of "offsetting": that is claiming the Iranian assets on their books as cover for outstanding U.S. loans.

ROCKEFELLER
. . . took up cudgels

This was taken a step further by Morgan Guaranty and others (including European American Bank for instance) when they went to the Federal Court in New York, on the basis of the confused utterings of Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, Iran's finance minister, seeking the right of "attachment." This gave them the ability to grab deposits at other banks, both domestic and abroad, to cover their loan exposure.

All very prudent and sensible one might argue. Except, of course, it is in direct contravention of the procedures laid down in most syndicated loan agreements.

These usually state that a bank, especially the lead manager of a loan, cannot recall it or declare it in default until it has won the approval of the majority of the syndicate members. Further, should one of the participants in a loan which goes wrong have some deposits to offset, it ought to share them with its partners in the syndicate.

There have been few indications as yet that the American banks are prepared to be so kind. In terse telexes to the European and Japanese counterparts they virtually declared it was every man for himself. Legal experts note that, when the mess is sorted out it will be those banks which took court action quickly, and have established priority, which will stand the best chance of recovering their loans.

The one hopeful sign is that Chase Manhattan seems to be taking the civilized route in relation to a $500 million loan which it lead-managed to the Empire of Iran in 1977. It called together all of the main participants in the loan to a "summit" in London. It could be, of course, that Chase's action has been provoked by conscience rather than anything else. If it had not been for David Rockefeller, Chase's chairman, taking up cudgels on the shah's behalf, the current mess might never have happened

Not surprisingly, the precipitate action of the New York banks has angered their partners across the country, not to mention their European and Japanese counterparts. It can surely be anticipated that they will come back in a flurry of their own law cases to make sure their New York brethren do not carry off the prize.

Indeed, there were reports that National Westminster Bank in London was about to do just that. The result of the untidy actions which have been taken can only, in the longer run, be some fat fees for lawyers, funds tied up until the 1980s in complex lawsuits, and a loss of confidence in the selfish American way of operating in the field of international banking.

The initial act of freezing Iran's deposits, together with the activities of the banks, has already severely damaged New York's integrity as an international financial centre. In the days when Britannia ruled the waves, and the Bank of England was the heart of the world's financial system, President Carter's move would have been unthinkable.

Financial history records that in July 1939, two months before Britain and Germany were at war, the Bank of England turned over to the Nazi authorities in Czechoslovakia the gold bullion which had been placed with it by the National Bank of Czechoslovakia before Hitler's men took over. It was a politically risky move but considered worth it to preserve banking integrity.

No such thoughts seem to have passed through the mind of the U.S. Treasury Secretary, William Miller, when he made his recommendation for an assets freeze to President Carter. In fact, his information was so poor at the time that he did not know that Iranian assets with U.S. institutions were nearer $8 billion than the $5 billion originally announced, and far outweighted the $2.7 billion or so of loans owed to U.S. banks.

By compromising the reputation of America banks as safe havens for OPEC money, Miller has, by some accounts, put the wind up the United Arab Emirates at least. And Saudi Arabia must have caused some concern all the time that the Grand Mosque was under the control of religious extremists. The fears which the American action raises are real ones to depositors, large and small. They are offset only by the reality that the dollar by default remains the only feasible reserve currency, since the Swiss and West Germans have no desire to take on that role.

Even so there must be a risk that the actions could put a nagging doubt over the dollar for several years to come. This would not take the form of deep and prolonged bouts of selling but of a steady stream of sales as holders of dollars try to keep their portfolios more diversified. This dollar weakness would be increased by the decision of Iran to stop taking dollars for oil payments, an example which other hostile and hard-line oil producers could follow.

Because of the hasty way in which the U.S. action was taken, it has not fully won the support of its Western allies. It is understood in London that the action by Morgan Guaranty against Krupp in West Germany was not as spontaneous as it may have seemed and may well have had the support of the Bundesbank at least.

But Britain is not falling in so quietly with the U.S. approach, and its banks are likely to be more aggressive in their battle for deposits. Moreover, the Japanese — who have quickly bought up the oil abandoned by the United States — seem to have been excluded from the full brunt of Iranian anger, in that payments on a 1973 loan from Sumitomo Bank have been honored.

In the final analysis the most disturbing effect of the U.S.'s moves against Iran is if it should damage the "recycling" process which has been a feature of the international banking system since the Yom Kippur war. A prolonged fight among the banks could well make them reluctant to put together new loans and could well make the biggest depositors, the OPEC nations, less willing to provide deposits without all sorts of conditions.

Such a process could cause problems for the less developed countries, who face severe balance-of-payments problems in 1979-80 because of OPEC price increases and the decline in demand for commodities as the world moves into recession. If it produced defaults among nations who don't have the deposits to cover their loans, there could be a domino effect in the international banking system — the rest is too horrible to contemplate. It is as well therefore to point out the risks.

Furniture-kicking time

russell baker

Not surprisingly, emotions in the U.S. have been turbulent ever since the Ayatollah kidnapped the American embassy in Tehran and started making ransom demands. This sort of behavior is what the Soviet lexicon calls a "provocation", and if the Ayatollah's aim was to provoke Americans, he succeeded admirably.

Certain statesmen not in power have called it "a national humiliation," but this seems to miss the point. It is not Americans who are humiliated by this squalid international behavior, but the Iranians, and particularly those who believe in the justice of their revolution against the Shah and yearn to see the dignity of their nation restored.

These people, who are only occasionally visible to the American public on television, are reduced to the sad argument that high dudgeon justifies shabby conduct. If Americans only understood how thoroughly they despise the Shah, goes their defence, they would see that kidnapping the embassy was a natural retaliation against his admission to the United States.

This is thin stuff, even when used to justify coarse conduct among individuals. There comes a time in many families when one party or the other feels so grievously afflicted by another that rational behavior seems more than the afflicting lout deserves.

These moments often produce thunderous family melodramas. Doors are kicked down. Lamps are hurled against the wall. Furniture is destroyed. While all this is happening, something like elation suffuses the aggrieved avenger and he, or she, is flooded with a great happiness. Action has cleared the air.

It has also messed up the house, and after the moment of exaltation subsides, life returns to drab normality, with unpleasant new complications. The door has to be fixed, lamps replaced, furniture repaired.

Human relations have to be restored or, what is worse and even more expensive, broken off. Among individuals, the smashing of the furniture is sometimes worth the agony to which it leads. Among nations, it rarely is. Among individuals, the person who has enjoyed the tantrum is usually the one who feels humiliated once blood pressure subsides. There is, after all, nothing humiliating about having a lamp thrown at your head. Dangerous, surely; infuriating, quite possibly; but not humiliating.

What has happened in Iran endangers and infuriates us, but it is hardly a national humiliation. In effect we have been mugged by a street gang. It could happen to anybody, even in towns with good police forces. In Iran, where there seems to be nothing approximating a government, the police are no good, or non-existent or in cahoots with the muggers.

It is Iran that is humiliated by this state of affairs, not the United States. The United States is victimized. In recent years, of course, the legal system here has often worked to humiliate the victims of crime, which may explain why so many normally sensible people believe that, having been blackjacked from the rear by a street gang, we have become a pitiable bunch of clods.

The result, of course, is a considerable body of passion which favors giving the Iranians a whiff of the grape. You see them on television trading abuse and punches with the domestic Iranian "students". (Are all Iranians in the student business?) A film clip from Houston the other night showed a group of American demonstrators and, among them, somebody carrying a big picture of John Wayne in his cowboy outfit.

No doubt about what John Wayne photographs signify in crowds like that. Duke would have done what a man's got to do. That is, he would have kicked in some doors, thrown some lamps and knocked the bejeebers out of the furniture.

This is probably an apt metaphor for the feelings of many Americans these days who believe that it's furniture-smashing time in old Persia. Even some of the longer-headed columnists who usually dilate on government with gravity, have been frothing at the typewriter about President Carter's decision not to go utterly hot under the collar while the embassy is still bound, gagged and in danger of its life.

To their credit, all of the more prominent presidential candidates have restrained their customary impulse to advise the White House how to do a better job. One is tempted to suspect that this is because they don't have any ideas for improving on what the president has been doing.

This is a foolish suspicion, of course. Once the affair is over, however it ends, we can be sure that all of them will turn out to have had brilliant ideas for deeds far more imaginative and daring than Carter's. After it ends, they will let us know what these were, probably in tedious detail.

So far the Iranians have been fortunate. The president has resisted the national impulse to break up the furniture, which would be dangerous for them, briefly exalting for us and result, after the happiness subsided, in the usual return to drab and, in this sort of case, bloody and tiresome normality.

Pepsi to close Montreal plant

MONTREAL (CP) — Pepsi-Cola Canada Ltd. will shut its only plant in Canada that produces soft-drink concentrate at the end of this month, and will begin importing the concentrate from another plant in Puerto Rico.

Phil Trask, the company's director of finance, confirmed the news, but gave a firm "no comment" when asked for reasons for the closure of the 10-year-old plant, situated in the Montreal suburb of St. Leonard. He also declined to comment on the future of the plant's 20 employees.

Trask denied a published report which said Pepsi-Cola concentrate from the Puerto-Rican plant might be of inferior quality compared with the concentrate produced here.

"That's absolutely ridiculous and inane," he said in a telephone interview from the company's head office in Toronto. "Pepsi-Cola maintains the same high quality standards at its operations throughout the world."

Massey-Ferguson profit predicted

TORONTO (CP) — Massey-Ferguson Ltd. should show a small profit in its latest fiscal year, compared with a loss of $256.7 million in 1978, president Victor Rice says.

His prediction said the profit will come before foreign exchange adjustments, extraordinary and non-recurring items. When non-recurring and other items are excluded from its 1978 financial year, the net loss was about $100 million.

Rice, who became president in September, 1978, said Massey's performance this year has exceeded expectations.

He predicted a further reduction in the company's labor force, but gave no details. Massey Ferguson now employs 56,000, down from 67,000 a year ago.

The company recently sold its unprofitable Hanomag building machinery subsidiary in West Germany and is discussing the sale of its interest in a Spanish farm equipment company with Nissan Motor Co. of Japan.

'79 good year for Bordeaux

PARIS (Reuter) — The 1979 Bordeaux wine harvest is abundant and its quality is good, says Henir de Lamber, chairman of the producerders' association, Counseil Interprofessionel du Vin de Bordeaux.

De Lambert told a news conference production of red and white Bordeaux wines increased by 14 per cent compared with last year to about 4.5 million hectoliters (99 million gallons).

These good results will help stabilize prices and regulate market supply, de Lambert said.

"They will also enable us to replenish our reserves depleted by the last two years' bad harvests," he said, adding that "1979 will be a very good vintage year."

"Bordeaux wines will not need much aging and will be similar to those of 1971 and 1976 years."

Belgium topped the list of Bordeaux wine importing countries for the 1978-79 campaign, taking 19 per cent of total exports, followed by Britain (15 per cent), the United States (14), West Germany and the Netherlands (13), Canada (seven) Denmark (five), Switzerland (four), Sweden (three) and Japan (two).

Dump ban on knits rescinded

OTTAWA (CP) — The Anti-Dumping Tribunal has rescinded a 1973 finding against double knit fabrics made of man-made fibres originating in the United Kingdom, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man, effective Dec. 17.

As a result, imports from these sources can enter Canada without facing dumping duties, even if prices are below those of the exporting country, the definition of dumping.

The tribunal, which assesses if Canadian producers suffer material damage from dumping, dropped its original order because the domestic industry is stronger now and few imports are coming from the exporters in question.

Anti-dumping duties levied between 1979 and the decision are not repaid, the tribunal said.

United Asbestos

MONTREAL (UPC) — United Asbestos Inc. reports net income of $5 million or 71 cents per share on revenues of $13.3 million for the six month period ended Sept. 30.

In the corresponding period of 1978, the company said Wednesday it recorded earnings of $4.6 million or 65 cents per share on revenues of $11.8 million.

For the third quarter of this year, the company reported earnings of $2.6 million or 36 cents per share on revenues of $6.8 million, down from the 1978 figures of $2.7 million or 38 cents per share on revenues of $6.5 million for the corresponding quarter.

$750M expansion

TORONTO (CP) — Hudson's Bay Co. Ltd. says it plans to spend $150 million a year for the next five years to expand its two major retail store outlets.

Don McGiverin, Bay president, said The Bay will open 10 or 12 new stores in that period, while Simpsons will open eight stores and expand two existing ones.

Hudson's Bay Co. took over control of Simpsons a year ago after a battle for control with Chicago-based Sears Roebuck and Co.

Royal grants Dominica loan

MONTREAL (CP) — The Royal Bank of Canada has announced that it will lend Dominica $2.25 million to boost the island's economy following disruptions created by hurricane David last summer.

The bank said $1.1 million will go towards redevelopment of Dominica's banana industry, which accounts for more than half of the island's total exports. Another $1.15 million will assist in the development of low-cost housing.

Bonds

TORONTO (CP) — Prices were generally unchanged in quiet pre-holiday trading on the Canadian bond market Wednesday.

The short end of the market was up 10 cents. Mid-, long-term, provincial and corporate issues remained the same.

Day-to-day money was available at 17 per cent.

Analysts said the main factor affecting the market is the continued tightness in the banking system liquidity and the pressure on the short-term rates.

A grim 1980 faced by oil-thirsty west

PARIS (AP) — For Japan and the oil-thirsty West, 1980 will be the worst economic year since 1975, with rising prices, record unemployment, record deficits and reduced growth, the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development predicted Wednesday.

It warned that the economic outlook for its 24 member countries will be even worse if the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries cuts production and if "drastic action" is not taken to slash oil consumption.

John Fay, the OECD's chief economist, revealed the broad outlines of the worsening economic situation at a news conference updating previous forecasts in light of recent sharp oil price increases and this week's oil meeting in Caracas.

"The disappointing forecasts could be tolerable if we are able to reduce homemade inflation and if we have more efficient and adequate energy policies," Fay said.

The British economist estimated the oil price increases announced last week by Saudi Arabia, Venezuela and the United Arab Emirates and the "probable" decisions of other OPEC countries will raise the average price of imported oil to about $26 U.S. a barrel from Jan. 1.

That figure would correspond to a rise of 21 to 22 per cent over 1979's year-end prices. The original OECD forecast completed Dec. 2 was calculated on an average real price increase of only 7.5 per cent, he said.

For the non-Communist industrialized countries that make up the OECD, Fay predicted a combined economic growth rate of 0.3 per cent at best, compared with the one per cent predicted in the outdated OECD report and the 3.25 per cent achieved in 1979.

It would also boost the predicted inflation rate to 10 per cent and bring the current account deficit to a record of $50 billion to $55 billion, compared with the $31.5 billion initially estimated.

The labor market also is expected to feel the impact of the higher oil prices, with unemployment seen reaching an all-time high of 20 to 25 million by the end of next year, compared with earlier estimates of 19.5 million and 16.75 million at the end of 1979.

Fay said a return to business and consumers confidence is of the utmost importance, noting that soaring gold prices and high oil spot prices are unmistakable "symbols" of the lack of confidence in the future.

Fay said oil import requirements next year by OECD countries will average between 28 and 29 million barrels daily. This year's OPEC output has been about 30.5 million barrels daily.

He warned of another world scramble for oil if Saudi Arabia reduces its output to 8.5 million barrels a day from the current 9.5-million-barrel level and other countries cut production or there is another temporary shutoff in Iran.

Despite the gloomy predictions, OECD economists maintain the 1980 prospects are "manageable."

But they warn that member governments must take "drastic action" to reduce energy consumption if they are to avoid "a serious and perhaps lengthy recession."

Hibernia find may be huge

CALGARY (CP) — The Albertan says some observers of the petroleum industry expect the Hibernia well off the East Coast will become the biggest in the world.

The newspaper quotes an unnamed oil analyst as saying the well, about 290 kilometres east of St. John's, Nfld., could yield oil at at a rate of more than 80,000 barrels a day.

Chevron Standard Ltd., the well operator, said Tuesday that testing in one interval of the well indicated a daily flow rate of 3,725 barrels. Others zones have produced flow rates of 2,635, 2,190 and 800 barrels a day.

Testing has been interrupted by an East Coast storm.

"It's as bad a storm as we have ever encountered there," said Chevron president Arthur Bristow. "But we will proceed with further tests as soon as the weather is favorable."

Other partners in the well are Mobil Oil Canada Ltd., Gulf Canada Resources Inc., Petro-Canada and Columbia Gas Development of Canada Ltd.

U.S. makes gains in newsprint race

NEW YORK (CP) — The American Paper Institute's chief economist says the United States is moving toward self-sufficiency and less dependence on Canada as the major supplier of newsprint.

"A shift is occurring from Canada to the U.S.," Norma Pace, API senior vice-president and economist, told a news conference this week.

Newspapers have followed the population to the sunbelt states, making it more economical for added capacity to be built in the south, closer to the consumer.

In its year-end survey, the API forecasts an annual average growth rate of 9.8 per cent in U.S. newsprint capacity through 1982.

The survey of more than 700 mills in the primary U.S. pulp and paper industry shows that expansion plans already under way will add 6.15 million short tons of new paper and paperboard capacity and 4.5 million tons of new woodpulp capacity in the three-year period 1980-1982.

U.S. newsprint capacity reached 4.1 million tons in 1979.

Mosque attack part of general Saudi revolt

By WALTER TAYLOR
Washington Star

WASHINGTON — The assault on the Grand Mosque in Mecca early last month was part of a planned general uprising in Saudi Arabia aimed directly at King Khalid and the rest of the Saudi royal family, according to information provided by surviving members of the insurgent force.

In addition to the attack in Mecca, the uprising included a simultaneous attack on a shrine in Medina, north of Mecca, and a large demonstration of foreign workers in the vast Saudi oil fields in the eastern part of the country, sources familiar with the prisoner interrogations said.

The chain of events, details of which have been closely held within the Saudi government, reportedly has so shaken the hierarchy of the royal family that some members have openly talked about leaving the country.

In one conversation involving a Saudi prince, the incidents — all of which occurred within a few hours, beginning Nov. 20 — reportedly were referred to as the Saudi Arabian "Pearl Harbor."

The sources, themselves close to the monarchy, say that at the least, the uprising has caused an introspective examination of the governmental power structure and of the current line of succession to the Saudi throne.

Among the questions being asked at the highest levels of the government, the sources indicated, is whether Crown Prince Fahd, the head of government and heir apparent to King Khalid, commands enough authority and respect, within the nation generally and among the Saudi armed forces in particular, to contend with another, more broadly based insurrection.

At a time of spiritual and religious revival throughout the Islamic world — and when many Arab leaders have, at the very least, toned down their taste for the ways of the West — Fahd continues to have a jet setter's reputation.

The November revolt was put down by Saudi national guardsmen with a strong personal loyalty to the Saudi foreign minister, Prince Saud Faisal. Saud, having rushed to Mecca from an Arab League summit conference he was attending in Tunis, personally took command of and led the forces that eventually recaptured the Grand Mosque.

"There is a very good reason why it was not the army or the navy or the air force that was called in," said one source familiar with the events of last month.

"The national guard was the only group that could be counted on, and there is a real question how effective it would have been had Saud not been personally in command."

One of the rebels captured in the Grand Mosque was a colonel in the national guard, sources said.

After trying originally to black out all news about the November events — including the shutdown of communication lines into and out of the country on the day the turmoil broke out — Saudi authorities have provided some skimpy information about the events at Mecca and the rebels involved in them.

But official accounts portray the fighting at Mecca as an isolated incident, instigated by a group of misguided Shiite Moslem zealots. Little information has been made available through official channels about trouble in other parts of the country.

Sources familiar with the events said, however, that at the same time as some 500 heavily armed men were staging the takeover in Mecca, a smaller band was attacking the mosque in Medina, second only to the Grand Mosque in religious significance in the Moslem world.

The planned takeover at Medina was aborted when the attackers found a unit of Saudi national guardsmen in the shrine. By happenstance, the sources said, the soldiers had stopped there to pray following a training exercise nearby.

A few shots were exchanged before the rebels, evidently realizing they were outgunned, withdrew, sources said.

These same sources quoted insurgents captured in Mecca as admitting under interrogation that the two raids were part of the same operation.

They said it was less certain that demonstrations that occurred during the same period in the Saudi oilfields were related to violence at the two mosques. The trouble in the oilfields, sources said, appeared rather to be an outgrowth of a religious demonstration by Shiite Moslems.

Saudi authorities previously have disclosed that the fighting in Mecca involved up to 500 attackers, most of them Saudis and the remainder of the force a mixture of Pakistanis, Egyptians, North and South Yemenis and a handful of Moroccans and Kuwaitis.

This was confirmed by reports from unofficial sources, who also said some of the prisoners taken at the mosque acknowledged they were trained in adjoining South Yemen. South Yemen, a Marxist state on the tip of the Arabian Peninsula, has long been known as a training camp for a variety of terrorist groups.

Sources also revealed that interrogation of the captives has convinced Saudi authorities that King Khalid himself was the target of the attack. The king had planned to attend religious observances in the mosque that day, but had canceled his appearance after becoming ill.

The plotters had hoped to capture Khalid and hold him hostage until their demands that a fundamentalist, Iran-like state be created.

Now that they have interrogated the surviving attackers, the Saudis are planning executions in the traditional fashion, by beheading.

Sources said plans for dispatching the captives have been hampered by a shortage of qualified executioners.

City okays Lion's bus deficit

Victoria city council's finance committee today approved a $2,600 expenditure as its share of the expected deficit for the Lions' bus service for the handicapped.

The money covers the period from Jan. 1 to Mar. 31 1980 when the Urban Transit Authority assumes responsibility for the service.

Municipal Affairs Minister Bill Vander Zalm said in a letter to council it's expected the total operating cost for three months will be about $16,000.

The province will pay $12,000 and Victoria's share will be $2,600.

"This is a short-term arrangement in order that the residents of Victoria who use the Lion's society services not face substantial fare increases for these services," said Vander Zalm.

The chamber's decade

Emery's ferry fare fight gets nod as best effort

By AL FORREST

The man of the decade in the Victoria Chamber of Commerce was Alan Emery who took over as president when the city faced a crisis and led the battle to save the local economy.

Emery was elected in the spring of 1976, a time when ferry rates were doubled, the economy sagged and tourist visits had fallen drastically.

His response was two-fold. He waged a successful battle to get the ferry rates reduced, forcing the provincial government to admit it had made a mistake.

And he pushed for the region's first industrial development commission.

The ferry rate war was spectacular. At first he battled alone, getting scant support even within his own executive.

Many people said he should keep quiet because he was merely advertising to tourists that ferry rates were too high.

But he persisted and support grew, first within the chamber and then among other tourist-related organizations on V.I.

At the peak of his campaign the following spring he had wide support.

And in June, 1977, exactly one year after the fares were hiked, they were cut back.

Following the cut, Victoria had a banner tourist season and things have looked up for the city ever since.

The decade began well for the chamber with Pip Holmes as president and it ended strongly under the leadership of Mel Cooper.

The years in between were mixed.

There were no spectacular chamber failures during the 70s but there was one continuing weakness, a tendency to talk and dream and not follow through.

This was not confined to the 70s, of course. The chamber first proposed a convention centre in 1898 (it's in the minutes of that year) but didn't push the idea vigorously until the late 70s. Just weeks before the decade ended we got the centre — perhaps.

But a more vivid example of the tendency to talk, not act, came following a speech in mid-decade by the then MLA Sam Bawlf.

He urged the chamber to form a task force to study the economic patterns of the downtown core to see if there was a need for a third department store or a new shopping centre.

One year later he again asked for a task force to study the question. Various chamber officials applauded the request.

In an uncharacteristic explosion, Bawlf said he wasn't looking for applause or endorsation, he was looking for action and had been for 12 months!

It was a fairly typical chamber incident.

Another was the hospitality course, an idea dreamed up by the chamber to encourage hotels and restaurants to provide better, more cheerful service.

The chamber voted to assist in the formation of a course. Two years later a chamber director jumped up at a meeting and said restaurant service was rotten in Victoria and something should be done about it. He proposed a hospitality course. Everyone applauded.

Most seemed to have forgotten the chamber had voted to act on the same idea two years earlier.

Even then, nothing came of the plan from the chamber but when someone suggested it casually to then tourism minister Grace McCarthy she had it in operation in less than 30 days.

Most of the presidents the chamber had during the 70s were good. In fact some were rated among the best in the chamber's 116-year history.

On the other side of the coin, there were no dismal flops during the decade but a couple were relatively inactive.

They all left their mark, one way or another.

Emery was the most spectacular, Holmes and Cooper were the best administrators.

Terry Farmer, at 32 the youngest president of the chamber, also had a good year. He was an innovator who went on to revitalize the city's tourist organization by helping to found the Visitors Information Centre.

It is premature to judge the contributions of John Ansell because he is still active in the chamber and if he can achieve his present task, that of uniting all warring festival societies and bringing some kind of order out of the competing desires of tourist organizations, he will have achieved a remarkable thing. This won't be known until spring.

The chamber presidents in the 1970s:

PIP HOLMES, 1970-71: A rare Victorian who prefers action to talk, he founded the Careers 70 program, an imaginative chamber idea to help hundreds of high school students get a realistic picture of occupations by having an on-the-job look.

HELEN BEIRNES, 1971-72: The first woman president for the Victoria chamber, the first woman president of any major chamber in Canada. She was relatively inexperienced in community work when she became president but grew in the job. With the aid of Holmes, she put together the Victorian Days idea. It was a success until it got too big to be run by a chamber committee. It was turned over to another group which was not so successful.

TERRY FARMER, 1972-73: The youngest president showed a concern for the elderly and got national publicity by urging Canada to adopt wage and price controls so that Victoria's large retirement community would not suffer from the ravages of inflation. The idea was at first opposed by the federal chamber, later adopted as policy and finally accepted by the federal government for a short time. Farmer also campaigned for late-night ferry service, a good idea that proved too expensive when it finally got a test in 1977.

KEN MURPHY, 1973-74: He kept a low profile and became known as Silent Ken. He waged a successful battle to keep the Princess Marguerite going.

BOB MCHAFFIE, 1974-75: Under his tenure there was action to improve the access road to the airport but not much else happened.

JACK HUTCHINS, 1975-76: The chamber drifted. There was some action on the university front where Hutchins led a successful campaign to get a law school.

ALAN EMERY, 1976-77: A banner year. Acting on an idea from chamber director Jeremy McCall, Emery pushed hard for an industrial development commission, eventually gaining the support of hundreds of provincial and municipal officials. His war against the government on the ferry rate issue was courageous and successful.

JOHN ANSELL, 1978: He focussed on the need for improved air and sea connections with the mainland. Ansell organized the first transportation seminar for Victoria. He will be remembered for tabbing the Johnson Street bridge a Mickey Mouse device that is hopelessly obsolete. It is still there.

MEL COOPER, 1979: A whiz at administration, he was one of the best chamber presidents, although his passion for secrecy occasionally got him in trouble.

First president of the 1980s will be Cedric Steele, who has already shown himself to be a man of ideas. The key, as always, will be to see if he is also a man of action.

Help us shorten hunger lineups

Dr. Lotta distributes milk to needy in Bangladesh

How long is hunger? Can it even be measured?

To Lotta Hitschmanova when she's helping Unitarian Service Committee workers in Bangladesh, hunger seems to stretch to infinity.

It's a line of undernourished people — mostly women and children — all with containers in hand, waiting for hours for a single cup of Canadian skim milk.

Of the eight countries in which the USC is running pilot projects, the suffering is the worst in Bangladesh.

The problems of the tiny country begin with the climate, which shifts from long weeks of drought to seemingly endless monsoons, when the country is awash for weeks on end.

Jammed into the habitable sections of the country are 79 million people, still suffering the effects of a bitter war of independence and subsequent invasion.

It's natural to assume there's little one Canadian can do.

But the USC says the minimum income for a family of four for a satisfactory standard of living is $150.

If you're earning, say, $300 a week, that means that about three day's take-home pay would support a Bangladesh family for a year.

Life expectancy in the country is about 48 years for men and women, but for many in Bangladesh, growing old in a state of constant hunger isn't all that enticing.

Hitschmanova says courage is the greatest asset of the people.

She stresses the desire of the USC to act in the role as adviser or friend.

"We want to help them to do things, but in their own way."

You can do your bit towards shortening the line of hunger by sending your donation to the USC's Christmas campaign.

Donations may be made at the Times business office or sent to the Victoria Times, Post Office Box 300, Victoria, V8W 2N4 — or left at any branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia. Cheques should be made payable to the Unitarian Service Committee.

B.C. wanted to kill Trident: Huntington

The B.C. government is trying to blame the federal government for failure of the Trident Aircraft project, the federal small business minister said Wednesday.

"They (the B.C. government) wanted to kill the project more than two months ago," said Ron Huntington.

"Now they're trying to hang it all on us so they can come out of it looking good. Everybody's trying to bail out of it now.

"If they're so sure of its success, why don't they back the whole thing? They won't because they know it won't work."

Meanwhile, Esquimalt-Saanich Conservative MP Donald Munro says he'll keep plugging away to see that either the Trigull aircraft is produced at the plant or that the firm's work force is kept together to produce parts for other aircraft.

Munro will attend a meeting tonight at the Sanscha Hall in Sidney to give his views on the problems and the threatened closure of the operation.

Huntington said that in October he allocated $550,000 to pay Trident's November payroll and was rebuked by the B.C. Development Corporation, which asked him why he just didn't "let the project die."

"They paid the December payroll so now they're saying we killed it. They were furious with me for keeping it going in November and now they're trying to make me out as the villain."

Huntington said his decision is final. He has agreed, however, not to recall the Trident loans immediately and trigger receivership for the company.

Huntington, MP for Capilano, was fuming after Socred Industrial Development Minister Don Phillips accused him and the Conservative government of abandoning the fledgling West Coast aircraft industry in favor of eastern projects.

The accusation followed Huntington's refusal to ask the treasury board for a $4-million loan to keep afloat the struggling company, which is trying to develop the amphibious plane Trigull for the American market.

BCDC was prepared to put up a matching loan and investors were going to come up with $2 million if the federal government would go along.

"There is no way that project is viable," Huntington said.

VIC rebuffed

Victoria aldermen today told the Visitors Information Centre to go back to its members to solve its finance problems.

"I belong to a similar trade organization and when we run out of money we go back to the members and ask for more," said Ald. Frank Carson.

"It seems to me it's been a pretty good tourist year."

Carson said that $20 each from the 600-member VIC would solve its problem.

The city's finance committee would not increase Victoria's grant of $24,000 but aldermen voted to advance the centre $5,000 out of its 1980 contribution to the tourist promotion group.

VIC treasurer Don Trivett said the centre has reduced its staff to five and "we've cut back the marketing program to zilch."

Centre president Ed Higgin said the centre does a lot of public relations work for the city.

Trivett said the centre has conducted an ambitious membership drive this year and has added about 80.

$2,000 skateboard fee

The parents of a group of teenagers who want to run Saanich Skatewave next year haye been told they will have to pay $2,000 insurance and operating costs.

Velda Hall, one of the parents, said Wednesday Saanich parks and recreation director Bill Young has told the group it would have to foot the bill if it wants to run the facility.

"It was quite a shock," she said.

Hall said she and the other parents were under the impression they would be allowed to take over without charge.

Parks committee chairman Mary Casilio said she believes Hall is correct and suggested the skateboard group make another appearance before the committee.

Saanich parks committee two weeks ago agreed to turn the skatewave, which closed this summer due to financial problems, over to a team of expert skateboarders called the Perfect Wave and their friends for a one-year trial.

The committee asked them to work out details of the arrangement with Young.

At one point Young suggested filling the concrete bowls and returning the site to its former condition.

"If 10 parents managed to raise $200 each they could cover the costs, but that would mean 10 kids are paying to skate and a bunch of kids are not," Hall said.

Part of the deal is that the regular skaters supervise the facility and keep it clean and free of damage. A turnstile would be installed and there would be no admission charge.

In addition to insurance costs, Young told them they would have to pay for water and garbage services, according to Hall.

She said the group plans to wait until January before taking further action.

The $125,000 skatebowl was closed this summer when its two young operators found they couldn't pay expenses and meet the $6,000 lease agreement with the municipality.

Skateboarders have been climbing over the fence and using the facility since then.

BATvan scores

One motorist was charged with impaired driving and two others received 24-hour roadside suspensions after RCMP using the Greater Victoria BATvan stopped 350 vehicles in Sidney Wednesday night.

Officers also handed out 17 traffic tickets and issued 55 warning notices.

A police spokesman said the crackdown on drinking drivers is being stepped up in Greater Victoria and roadblocks will be held every night at scattered locations throughout the Christmas season.

Saanich clerk named deputy administrator

Saanich council Wednesday decided to have weekly meetings and to promote municipal clerk Robert Sharp to deputy administrator.

The promotion gives Sharp more decision-making authority, increases his administrative duties and will probably mean an increase in salary, said Mayor Mel Couvelier.

Council will hold meetings every Monday after a committee-of-the-whole session. Until now council has been meeting every second week.

Public speaking time will be reserved before each meeting and a period set aside during the meeting for public presentations.

Couvelier said he is considering eliminating committee chairmanships.

Restructuring will give administration more authority, but won't take power away from elected representatives, he said, adding that the bureaucracy is running things now because the system is unorganized.

Sharp's new job gives him the same authority as municipal administrator William Tremayne in dealing with department heads.

Sewers foul CRD plan

A study of growth costs for the western community may result in 10 years of Capital Regional District planning going down the drain.

The CRD for years has planned to have new development directed toward the western community of Colwood and Langford but preliminary results of a growth survey show an estimated $120 million would be needed to provide such services as sewers, roads, water and policing.

The board's regional planning committee was told Wednesday that the Colwood-Langford area can take only 2,000 more people if sewers are not installed.

The official regional plan projects a western community population of 67,000 by 1996, compared with 29,400 in 1976.

"It doesn't take a mental giant to decide on the options if it is too expensive to go the west," said Victoria Ald. Bob Wright said.

He said the options appear to be higher density in the city and more growth in Saanich and on the Saanich Peninsula.

He said the report is the first indication that the CRD is going in the wrong direction by proposing concentration of growth in the western community.

"It's unrealistic to expect western community residents to pay such costs," Wright said.

Further works on costs, he added, should be given top priority.

Once the costs are known, Wright said a political decision must be made on where accommodation for new residents will be located.

Hopefuls line up for nomination

Salesman Richard Hughes will challenge Ladysmith United Church minister Jim Manly for the NDP nomination in Cowichan-Malahat in the Feb. 18 federal election.

The nominating meeting will be held at 1:30 p.m. Dec. 30, at the Langford Legion Hall, 761 Station Road.

A Langford site was selected in an effort to build up support in the southwestern part of the riding where Tory Don Taylor built up a big lead in the May vote.

Meanwhile, in the Comox-Powell River riding, MP Ray Skelly said he will seek the nomination again for the NDP.

The meeting will be held Dec. 30 at the Native Sons' Hall in Courtenay. Nominations must be made in writing by Dec. 26.

Tories will hold their nominating convention in the Comox-Powell River riding on three different days. The meetings are Campbell River Jan. 10, Powell River Jan. 11 and Courtenay Jan. 12.

Al Lazerte, Tory candidate in May, has not decided yet whether he will seek the nomination.

Jack Pearson of Powell River, Liberal candidate in the May election, has said he will not run again.

Bus subsidy fuel tax debated January 9

The Capital Regional District board on Jan. 9 will debate a bylaw that would levy a three-cent-per-gallon surcharge on gasoline and diesel fuel to defray deficits for public transit.

The board's transit services committee — after a three-hour discussion — decided Wednesday the bylaw will have to be debated without any recommendation from the committee.

Outer Gulf Islands director Jim Campbell and Colwood director Howard Drummond said they would not support the surcharge unless public transit in the outlying areas is improved when the CRD takes over transit from B.C. Hydro.

The provincial government has appointed Saanich mayor Mel Couvelier and Victoria mayor Bill Tindall to the Urban Transport Authority, which is charged with overseeing the transfer of public transit from Hydro to the CRD, the Greater Vancouver Regional District and other municipalities.

UTA's Larry Miller confirmed today a preliminary budget of close to $14 million has been presented to the government for the CRD's transit system.

Miller said the UTA has also been given authority to tender for 28 new buses but no action can be taken until the CRD signs a transit services agreement.

The committee listened Wednesday while planners C.H. Wakelin and David Langley waded through a 35-page report on goals and objectives of the proposed transit planning program — without getting down to specifics.

Chairman Norma Sealey, mayor of Sidney, said she was opposed to having a gas surcharge to underwrite public transit deficits.

"I really think it's a most unfair system," she said.

She said raising property taxes would be a fairer way to subsidize public transit because it affected everyone. She said the gas surcharge penalized people who are forced to use their cars for work and other purposes.

Under the system set up by the government public transit deficits must be met by first a gas surcharge, then increases on Hydro rates and, finally, increases on property taxes.

Fisherman still sought

The search continued today for a Cortes Island fishermen who left Big Bay on Stuart Island Sunday to return home.

Don Packard's 16-foot open pleasure boat was found washed ashore on Breton Island, east of Quadra Island, late Wednesday afternoon.

The search involves a ground party with an RCMP police dog, a Buffalo aircraft from CFB Comox, an RCMP helicopter from Campbell River and the Canadian Coast Guard cutter Ready.

New lights

Two new traffic lights have been installed on Bridge Street.

One, at Gorge Road, went into operation today and the other at Bay Street will start 10 a.m. Friday.

Recreation survey set

A three-day public survey will be carried in late January as part of a program designed to create a recreation master plan for the Capital Regional District.

The Surrey firm of PERC (Professional Environmental Recreation Consultants) has been hired to produce the plan.

The provincial government's recreation and fitness branch has allocated $75,000 for the project.

PERC president Brian Johnston said Wednesday volunteers will be used to carry out a door-to-door survey of 5,000 to 7,000 homes. Questionnaires with about 14 to 15 questions will be handed out, the volunteers returning 30 minutes later to pick up the forms.

The questions will range from the age, sex and other details of the householder to the types of recreation he or she enjoys and what type of recreation he or she would like to see introduced. Householders will also be asked if they would be willing to pay extra taxes for any additional recreation facilities made available.

Johnston said service and recreational organizations will also be canvassed.

He said people who want to volunteer should contact their local recreational representatives or PERC's local researcher Jon Gurban at 382-9847.

PERC has completed more than 40 similar master plans in the province and the CRD master plan is expected to be completed by next June.

An inventory of all public and private recreational facilities will be compiled.

Only Oak Bay and Central Saanich have decided not to take part in the project.

60 named to Order of Canada

Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova, well-known to Victorians as an unrelenting worker for the world's needy and founder of the Unitarian Service Committee of Canada, is among 60 Canadians who have been appointed to the Order of Canada.

Also named to the order by Gov.-Gen. Ed Schreyer are Dr. Robert W. Stewart, of Victoria, president of the International Association for the Physical Sciences of the Ocean, wartime spymaster Sir William Stephenson and baseball star Ferguson Jenkins.

Stewart, until last summer, was director-general of the Institute of Ocean Sciences, which he helped found.

He was a principal organizer of the multi-nation Global Atmospheric Research Program.

For 20 years he has done research in physical oceanography involving the National Research Council, Defence Research Board and as Canada's representative in various international joint scientific ventures.

In August he became the province's first assistant deputy minister for science and technology in what is now the ministry of universities, science and communication.

The Order of Canada is the country's highest distinction and has three levels — companion, officer and member.

Stephenson and Hitschmanova were named companions to the order.

Stephenson's achievements are recounted in several books, the latest of which is A Man Called Intrepid. Among other things, he developed a spy school in Oshawa during the Second World War and disclosed details of an enormous Soviet espionage network in Canada.

Hitschmanova founded the voluntary relief organization 34 years ago. It is now involved in 93 projects in overseas countries, providing food, clothing and shelter to the needy with priority being given to children, the elderly and the handicapped.

Barbara Frum, a broadcaster with the CBC radio program As It Happens, and Gordon Pinsent, author and star of The Rowdyman and the television series A Gift to Last, were also named officers.

Jenkins, a veteran pitcher, won 20 or more games in a season seven times and has 2,770 career strikeouts, ninth among all major-league pitchers.

The governor-general will present the orders formally at an investiture to be held in the spring.

CRUSHING PLAY in New York's Madison Square Garden was this one by Ranger defenceman Ron Greschner. After scoring goal that erased 3-2 deficit, Greschner wound up on top of Vancouver Canuck netminder Glen Hanlon. Rangers carried on for 5-3 National Hockey League triumph Wednesday.

No one is crying for the Canadiens

By The Canadian Press

Montreal Canadiens, finding out how the other half lives, are discovering there is little sympathy throughout the National Hockey League as they continue a slump which has seem them lose their last six games.

"I love it," beamed Minnesota coach Glen Sonmor after his North Stars had handed Montreal a 5-2 setback in Bloomington, Minn., Wednesday.

Winners of the Stanley Cup for the last four years, the Habs haven't lost six in a row since 1940.

"For sure I've got to be worried," said coach Claude Ruel, who also saw his team lose its 10th straight road game. "This club needs a win badly, over anybody.

"I can't find fault with the team; they're trying very badly. But everything went their way tonight. The North Stars were fired up, just like everybody is for us."

The soaring North Stars, winners of five of their last six games, proved they're for real by exploding for four unanswered goals to erase a 2-1 deficit.

Sonmor said he knew his club had the ability to challenge for a top spot in league standings this winter — "But I guess I am a little surprised that it's happened so quickly."

The victory lifted Minnesota to a tie for third spot in overall standings with Boston Bruins, each with 39 points.

"We cannot let this go on much further," said Ruel. "We'll just have to do it at home. We have six or eight games coming up there. We either do it at home or we'll be in bad trouble."

In Toronto, where his Kings were playing to a 4-4 draw with the Maple Leafs, Los Angeles coach Bob Berry was not sympathetic to the Canadiens' plight.

"I don't think anybody is shedding any tears about Montreal," said Berry, whose club now is two points away from tying the Canadiens for the lead in the Norris Division. "I think it's the best thing for hockey. I've got nothing against Montreal, but it's nice they're stumbling a little bit."

Elsewhere, Detroit Red Wings defeated the Oilers 6-4 in Edmonton, Buffalo Sabres edged the Jets 3-2 in Winnipeg, the Nordiques downed Colorado Rockies 6-3 in Quebec, the Rangers defeated Vancouver Canucks 5-3 in New York and Hartford Whalers registered a 5-4 home-ice victory over Washington Capitals.

There was one tie other than the Leafs-Kings stalemate — the Black Hawks and Pittsburgh Penguins couldn't score a goal in a 0-0 contest in Chicago.

Detroit snapped a five-game winless streak with a two-goal effort from Vaclav Nedomansky and some sparkling netminding by Rogatien Vachon. Vachon faced a 53-shot Edmonton barrage, compared to 38 faced by Ed Mio in the Oilers' goal, but weathered the storm.

After the loss, Edmonton coach Glen Sather threatened to make personnel changes.

"There is no way I'm going to lose with the same hockey club," he said. "If our guys are not winning and not producing and not working their butts off, I'm going to make some changes."

Quebec's power play continued to produce, this time with three goals, as Real Cloutier and Blair Stewart each scored twice and Richard Leduc and Reg Thomas once each to pace the Nordiques, who were outshot 32-24 by Colorado.

In Philadelphia, the Flyers, idle Wednesday, were looking for a little piece of immortality tonight.

The Flyers meet their cross-state rival, Pittsburgh Penguins, and with a tie or victory they can imprint a new line in the NHL record book.

Philadelphia is unbeaten in its last 27 games. The record is 28, set by Montreal in 1977. (Summaries are on page 16)

Penalty-killers spark Cougars

Victoria Cougars are three games away from the halfway point in the 1979-80 Western Hockey League campaign and, from a standpoint of scheduling, the rest of the way could be a downhill ride to a record season.

By defeating the Bighorns 6-1 in Billings on Wednesday night, the Cougars claimed their 25th victory and 50th point in their 33rd game. Barring a second-half collapse, the club is in good position to record Victoria's most successful campaign.

The 1974-75 Cougars scored 47 victories and five ties for 99 points en route to a first-place finish in the Western Division.

The victory in Billings assures Victoria of a successful road trip. Now 5-3, Cougars complete their most strenuous journey in Portland on Saturday. Victoria's final extended road trip, in mid-January, calls for Cougars to play only five games in seven days.

Without a 10-6 overall road record, the Cougars are in a position to become the first Victoria team to total 100 points in a season.

More smart penalty-killing and another solid performance by rookie netminder Grant Fuhr powered Cougars to their latest triumph.

Cougars were outshot 47-36 but Fuhr came up with several spectacular stops, especially in the second period and the final five minutes of the third when Bighorns exerted greatest pressure.

Cougars rode out all but one of their nine shorthanded situations and it was the penalty-killers who finally settled a nip-and-tuck affair.

Winger Greg Adams scored his 32nd goal of the season while Victoria was playing shorthanded and Barry Pederson added the insurance marker into an open net, with Victoria again short as the result of a last-minute penalty to captain Mark Robinson.

Victoria's penalty-killing, and Fuhr, were at their best during a stretch of one minute, 26 seconds midway in the second period when Cougars played two short but did not give up a goal.

Bob Jansch, Grant Rezansoff, Bud McCarthy and Brad Palmer scored Victoria's other goals. Lindsay Carson, Murray Brumwell, John Eger and Jeff Zilkie (on the power play) connected for Billings.

The goals by Adams and Pederson boosted Victoria's total of shorthanded goals to 11, by far the best in the league.

Despite the victory, Victoria coach Jack Shupe was unimpressed — except for the play of the penalty-killers and Fuhr.

"It was almost as if two days of rest was too much for them," said Shupe.

In Regina, Moscow Spartak toyed with Regina Pats of the in an exhibition game and took an 11-2 victory to give the Soviet Union team a sweep of its eight-game series against WHL opponents.

The play of Spartak dazzled the Pats and left the soldout house of 5,420 buzzing.

Aleksei Kostylev led Moscow with two goals and Valeri Bragin, Alexsandr Kozahevnikov, Alexandr Yakushev, Sergei Schepelev, Vassili Spiridonov, Evegeny Kozachkin, Arkadi Rudakov, Vladmir Zubkov and Yuri Rychkow added one each. John McMillan and Blake Stephen replied for Regina.

CAPE TOWN (Reuter) — American heavyweight Mike Koranicki knocked out Kallie Knoetze of South Africa in the 10th round Wednesday night.

Selects give all - lose

MOSCOW (CP) — The Soviet Union maintained its unblemished record at the Izvestia hockey tournament Wednesday 5-2 over a persistent Canada Selects that frustrated the Russians' vaunted attack through much of the game.

It marked the third win in as many games for the Soviet national side which will represent that country at the Lake Placid Olympics in February while the Canadians, made up primarily of National Hockey League players who have not been playing regularly this season, went down to their third straight loss.

"I'm never happy with a loss of course," said Selects coach Tom Watt, "but you have to be proud of a team that gives everything the way we did tonight."

In another Izvestia contest Wednesday, Czechoslovakia trounced Sweden 6-1. The Czechoslovaks had earlier beaten Canada Selects 10-1 and tied Finland, 3-3.

Viktor Zhluktov opened the scoring at 1:31 of the first period, but a scrappy Canadian team kept the Soviets scoreless for the longest time in the tournament — until Valeri Vasiliev counted at 11:36 of the second to break a 1-1 tie.

"We didn't change our tactics," Watt said of the previous two losses to the Czechoslovaks and Sweden, 7-2. "But that's the problem with teams not being together and not working long enough.

"We started to play a system (last week) and the guys are just now beginning to play it well."

The Selects were put in a position of killing off a couple of penalties in the second period — one of which was costly when Vasiliev broke the stalemate with Canadian defenceman Dennis Owchar of Colorado Rockies off serving a questionable cross-checking penaty.

The tie was created by Wayne Dillon of Winnipeg Jets earlier in the session from a scramble around the Soviet net.

Owchar made amends for his miscue when he set up Chuck Arnason of Vancouver Canucks 23 seconds into the third period that tied the score at 2-2.

But seconds later veteran captain Boris Mikhailov fired the game winner.

The Selects is made up of a blend of pros and nine members of the Canadian Olympic team that will be playing in Lake Placid.

Selects general manager Bill Watters observed later: "We're celebrating our anniversary tonight. We've been together a week."

Olympians' pride bruised after bombing by Swedes

LAKE PLACID, N.Y. (CP) — Medical report on Canadian Olympic hockey team:

Diagnoses: centre Jim Nill — bad bout of influenza; right winger Paul MacLean — hyper-extended knee; right winger Glenn Anderson — groin pull, bruised knee, forehead bruise; goaltender Bob Dupuis — bruised hand.

Over-all team — hurt pride.

Prescription: Dissolve frustrations, refrain from practising for at least one day, return Saturday for appointment with Czechoslovakia.

That's the status of Canada's representative at the pre-Olympic tournament in this Adirondack Mountain resort town following an 8-1 pasting Wednesday night at the hands of Sweden.

And it's not from team physician Geoff Thomas but from coaches Lorne Davis and Clare Drake who were beyond themselves when it came time to assess the team's third loss in as many starts at this five-country invitational event.

"We weren't checking effectively and it just seemed to keep snowballing and we couldn't stop it," Davis said after watching his forces surrender seven first-period goals — one after just 48 seconds of play, two others 41 seconds apart and three more in a 58-second span.

"If we could have kept the score respectable in the first period, with the way we played in the other two, we may have been able to come back."

Wishful thinking.

In each of its games, Canada has played hockey for two periods and simply gone through the motions in the other. The only difference Wednesday was that the first period proved to be the nemesis.

For the superstitious types, Anderson offered the following explanation:

"We weren't on time for breakfast this morning and we kind of missed the first period tonight."

The Soviet Union was a 3-1 loser to Czechoslovakia in Wednesday night's other contest.

Molsons extend squash lead

Molsons expanded its lead to 10 points over runner-up Labatts in the Victoria Men's Commerical Squash League by defeating the latter team 12-4 Wednesday.

In the other matchup, Graphic Offic downed Chauneys, 13-5.

Molsons have 51 points and are followed in order by Labatts (41), Graphic Office (33) and Chauneys (23).

Labatts 4, Molsons 12

Mike Greenwood def. Mike Montgomery, 3-0; Egon Khun lost to Phil Nanavati, 3-0; Jim Laing lost to Leigh Hendrie, 3-1; Rod Symington lost to Gerry Poulton, 3-0; Stephen Petzing lost to Deane Strongitharm, 3-0.

Chauneys 5, Graphic Office 13

Richard Jackson defeated Sher Horne, 3-1; Stewart Dixon lost to Phil Green, 3-2; Ross Ferguson lost to Julian Greenwood, 3-0; Colin Crisp lost to John Penner 3-0; Don Tait lost to Dave Cowan, 3-0.

Aussies capture first test

PERTH (AP) — A superb spell of seam bowling by veteran Geoff Dymock led Australia to a 138-run victory Wednesday in the first test over England.

Dymock took six for 34 off 17.2 overs as Australia clinched victory with 18.4 overs of the compulsory final 20, to spare.

It took Australia to a 1-0 in the three-test series, and it was Mike Brearley's second loss in 24 test matches as captain of England.

Dymock, 34 and close to retiring several times over the last three years, wrapped up the game with a sensational burst of three wickets for no runs off his final seven deliveries.

It was also Dymock who started Australia on the right patch with the wicket of Derek Randall late Tuesday night and the wicket of Peter Willey in the second over of the day Wednesday.

England's batsmen capitulated on a pitch that lacked any real devil, and opener Geoff Boycott, 39, was the only Englishman to show any real fight.

Eagles, Oilers playoff choices

Times News Services

Philadelphia Eagles refuse to believe that if you stop running back Walter Payton you stop Chicago Bears.

Eagles, hampered by a surprise snow storm that forced an indoor workout Wednesday, host the Bears on Sunday in the first round of the National Football League playoffs.

Eagles' coach Dick Vermeil, who has rebuilt the Eagles from an also-ran to a Super Bowl contender in just four years, says he's smart enough to know that Chicago didn't win seven of its last eight games strictly on the feet of Payton.

Payton gained 1,610 yards on 369 carries and scored 14 touchdowns as the second leading runner in the National Football League during the regular season. He was succeeded only by Earl Campbell of Houston Oilers, the league's most valuable player.

"This is a good football team (Chicago) with a strong defence."

The Eagles (11-5) are an early 6½ point favorite over the Bears (10-6), because Philadelphia played in what most pro football experts believe is a tougher division. Also, the Eagles are home.

Meanwhile, Houston Oilers are 6 point favorites to down Denver Broncos in the other game.

Bears play Eagles at in the National Conference game at Philadelphia at 9:30 a.m. PST. Broncos meet the Oilers at Houston in the American Conference matchup beginning at 1 p.m. PST.

Stevenson finalist for award

MONTREAL (CP) — Eight finalists in three categories, including Victoria Budget coach Harvey Stevenson, have been chosen to compete for the 14th annual Air Canada amateur sports awards, which are in recognition of outstanding contributions to amateur sports in Canada.

Stevenson, nominated by Softball Canada, led Budgets to the gold medal at the Pan-American Games in Puerto Rico and the silver medal at the Canadian men's championship.

Other finalists in the coaching category are Lyle Sanderson of Saskatoon, nominated by the Canadian Track and Field Association and Rudy Wieler of St. Catharines, the selection of the Canadian Amateur Rowing Association.

Nominated in the executive category are Dorothy Asuma of Richmond, William Sterling of Vancouver and Clinton Ward of Toronto.

Asuma was nominated by the Canadian Women's Field Hockey Association, while Sterling and Ward were named by the Canadian Soccer Association and the Canadian W... Association, respectively.

Two finalists will compete for top official honors — Brad Barton of Dartmouth, N.S., nominated by the Canadian Volleyball Association, and Mike Eurchuk of Edmonton, named by the Canadian Amateur Wrestling Officials Association.

The three ultimate winners — Executive of the Year, Coach of the Year and Official of the Year — will be honored in a nationally-televised ceremony in Ottawa on Jan. 26.

The three winners will each receive two first class tickets to anywhere on the Air Canada system plus $300 expense money, while the runners-up will receive two economy class system tickets.

Laurie gets her berth

OTTAWA (CP) — The jury is still out on several athletes, including a 1976 gold medal winner, skier Kathy Kreiner of Timmins, Ont., hoping to compete in February at the Winter Olympics at Lake Placid, N.Y..

Jack Lynch, technical director of the Canadian Olympic Association, said Wednesday the deadline for selecting athletes is Jan. 19.

If athletes have "hard competitive data" to show they have a good shot at breaking the top 16 they will be selected, Lynch said.

Lynch confirmed that skier Laurie Graham of Inglewood, Ont., has been selected.

Graham joins a select group of 33 athletes — including 20 hockey players — that will represent Canada in February at the Winter Games at Lake Placid, N.Y.

Graham won a berth on the team with a 10th-place finish Wednesday in an Austrian downhill World Cup race. In earlier races she has finished third and seventh.

Under tough new guides set by the association, athletes must either be in the top 16 in the world or have "hard competitive data" to show that they have a probable chance of making it at Lake Placid.

The selection review board includes Dick Pound, association president, Lynch, former Sport Canada head Roger Jackson and Geoff Gowan of the Coaching Association of Canada. It will meet Jan. 4 and Jan. 19 in Montreal.

Kreiner, Canada's only gold medal winner at the 1976 Games in Innesbruck, has an 11th and two 20th-place finishes with one race to go.

At times, history counts for nought at South Cowichan Lawn Tennis Club

South Cowichan tennis hit hard by weatherman

By MAX LOW

Hardly the time to start thinking about outdoor tennis, is it? Particularly not the oldstyle kind they used to play on grass.

Yet if those who like to dabble when things are drier don't start thinking pretty hard right now, Canada's oldest tennis club and the last bastion of grass tournament play in this part of the world — the historic South Cowichan Lawn Tennis Club — will die.

Run by a small group of volunteers from nearby Duncan but catering to a vast number of players from all over B.C. and the United States, the club is in dire straits.

Floodwaters from an adjacent tributary of the Koksilah River, swollen by all the recent heavy rains, have ripped up and badly damaged the seven grass and two hard courts, smashed down large sections of the solid board fence and inundated both the clubhouse and caretaker's suite.

Today, it's a far cry from the warm months of summer when lawn tennis buffs scamper around on the soft green courts while others lie and watch in the leafy shade of the giant trees. Now, the trees are stark and bare, the courts forlorn, the wooden benches overturned and scattered and an unfinished bottle of suntan oil stands on a fencepost waiting for the sun.

It's not the first time this has happened, of course. In fact, after another such downpour about 10 years ago, club officials were driving past and noticed someone canoeing across the courts! And on still another damp occasion, a herd of cattle swept in and sank up to their knees in mud somewhere between the baselines and the nets.

But this is the worst damage yet and it comes at a time when things were already at a low ebb for the South Cowichan Lawn Tennis Club. It is almost out of money and volunteers are becoming increasingly hard to find in this modern age.

Only seven people out of a local membership of around 80 (there's also a large out-of-town membership) showed up at the recent annual meeting and none of those — except veteran Jeff Hunter would accept any kind of office. He agreed to tackle once again the job of club president even though he has a court of his own at home and, because of an illness and subsequent operation, he isn't able to play tennis himself much any more, anyway.

English-born Jeff was the man who resurrected the club in 1957, becoming president the first week he arrived and keeping that job for 12 years during which time he dramatically turned the place from an overgrown, rundown hovel to an attractive club which each summer hosts the oldest and most popular tournament in the province.

Quite frankly this time, though, Jeff warns, unless he gets considerable financial backing from those who like to use the courts each summer or a recreation grant from somewhere, the Cowichan club will not open next season. (Donations can be mailed to P.O. Box 717 in Duncan or you can phone Jeff at 748-1020).

Built on land given by the Caulfield Estate "for use as long as lawn tennis is played on it," the club opened in 1888 — a mere 10 years after the historic All England Tennis Club at Wimbledon.

"In those early days, they used to row over from Salt Spring Island to play in the weekend tournaments on the lawn courts," says Jeff.

"This club is a part of our Island heritage . . . and I'd hate to see it die."

India ends Pakistan's win string

BOMBAY (Reuter) — India swept to its first cricket victory over Pakistan in almost 28 years when it won the third test by 131 runs with a day to spare Thursday.

The first two matches in the six-test series were drawn, but India finally broke the deadlock after 17 wickets fell on the fourth day.

India, resuming 278 runs ahead with seven second-innings wickets in hand, lost its remaining batsmen for 43 and was dismissed for 160. Pakistan, which needed 322 to win, was bowled out for 190.

Home-run king gets $345,000

TOKYO (AP) — Baseball's home run king, Sadaharu Oh, the biggest money earner in Japanese professional baseball, has signed his 1980 contract with Yomiuri Giants for $345,000, it has been reported.

The Giants declined comment on the reports, which a spokesman termed speculative, since Japanese players' salaries are not made public.

The 40-year-old first baseman is reported to be earning twice as much as his nearest rival, Koji Yamamoto of Hiroshima Carp.

Oh has hit 835 career home runs, 83 more than America's career leader, Hank Aaron.

Canucks may appeal $348,000 injury award

VANCOUVER (CP) — In a landmark decision that sent shock waves throughout professional sport in North America Wednesday, hockey player Mike Robitaille received a $348,000 award against Vancouver Canucks because the National Hockey League club pressured him to play while injured.

And while Robitaille says he is relieved at winning the judgment — highest of its kind in Canada — it is not known when, if ever, he will see the money.

The Canucks, criticized by Mr. Justice William Esson of the British Columbia Supreme Court for being high-handed, arrogant and displaying a reckless regard for the defenceman's rights, said hours after the decision was handed down that they are considering an appeal.

Robitaille said in a telephone interview from Buffalo, N.Y., that he is pleased with the settlement, considering the back injury caused by playing hockey has resulted in partial paralysis on his right side.

"I figure I could have made a half million over the next five years. I was staggered with the settlement. I didn't realize the importance of the case until today. It's something that in future cases of this sort they'll always go back to."

Allan Eagleson, executive director of the NHL Players Association, was also buoyed by the award.

"Players now can stand up and say to hell with you when clubs insist they play hurt," he said in a telephone interview from Toronto.

Robitaille, 31, meanwhile, is looking to surgery to alleviate future problems with his back after he put most of his life savings into the court case in which he claimed Canucks forced him to play on Jan. 19, 1977, while suffering from a spinal condition.

"I just feel relaxed," he said. "It's a feeling I haven't had for three years."

Robitaille will never regain his full health and tires easily.

"Mike will never get his health back so this judgment is security for the future," said his wife, Isable. "However, he needs surgery to maintain the status quo . . . to ensure his condition doesn't worsen.

"His speech has been corrected but he tires so quickly. Our seven-year-old can skate much longer than Mike. He can drive the car but not for great distances because he tires. Hand controls have been suggested."

Robitaille hasn't held a regular job since his injury nearly three years ago and is incapable of working more than a few hours at a time.

"This is like the after effects of a stroke," he said. "I can get around but I can't run . . . and things aren't getting any better.

"My right leg gets jumpy and shakes uncontrollably. If I ever suffered whiplash in a car I'd end up in a wheelchair."

Judge Esson sharply criticized Canuck president Bill Hughes and general manager Phil Maloney for ignoring Robitaille's complaints about his back and set total damages at $435,000 — which included $35,000 exemplary damages — but held that Robitaille was partly responsible for what happened to him. He ruled the club 80 per cent responsible and Robitaille 20 per cent.

The judge said he accepted the player's claim that the club ignored his back complaints as being "all in his head."

The court was told that some months prior to the incident Robitaille had been suffering from depression and had seen a psychiatrist.

Later, he suffered a hockey injury to his back that left him with a condition about which he frequently complained, but club management and club doctor Michael Piper refused to take seriously, court was told.

Eventually he was sent to a specialist who diagnosed his problem as a back condition which could be treated with rest and physiotherapy.

However, the judge said the club refused to take Robitaille's back complaints seriously and he was pressured by threats of suspension into returning to the ice.

About a week before the Jan. 19 game he fell during play when his legs began to act like rubber but, still under what he felt was club pressure to play despite his back condition, continued to play, until he collided with Dennis Owchar of Pittsburgh Penguins.

"There were clear signs from the moment he fell to the ice that he had been seriously injured. Yet no doctor and no stretcher came on the ice.

"He was dragged from the ice in a clumsy and reckless manner which could well have aggravated the injury."

Loss of Pinsent means end of series

TORONTO (CP) — A Gift To Last, CBC Television's award-winning series about life in a fictional turn-of-the-century Ontario town, will not be back next season, its producer says.

Herb Roland, who also directed several of the 21 episodes over the last three years, said Wednesday that the loss of Gordon Pinsent, the series creator and writer, was a major factor behind the cancellation.

Pinsent, who won an ACTRA award last year for his role as Sgt. Edgar Sturgess, announced this fall that he would not return to the series because he wanted to pursue his career in film acting and writing.

Roland had originally hoped to continue without Pinsent by introducing new characters and writers.

"When we finished shooting I was very keen to go on," Roland said in an interview. "But, I have mixed feelings now."

"Of course I'm disappointed because I think we really had something good, but I finally came to agree with the decision.

The show, which has been sold to numerous countries, also lost two other stars — actors John Evans and Janet Amos.

Roland said he was concerned that "the chemistry might not work so well with all the new characters we needed."

The final episode was shown last Sunday but the network says reruns will be shown sometime next year.

Roland said the show's ratings were hurt this year in the 9 p.m. Sunday time slot because of competition from such movies as Jaws and The Sound of Music.

Choir a crowd pleaser

By AUDREY JOHNSON

A well selected and balanced program matching the pleasing sound of Amity Singers' chamber-sized choir with spare and excellent instrumental accompaniment marks this year's Amity Christmas at Christ Church Cathedral.

Prepared and conducted by Amity music director Jon Washburn, the choir's performance in general Wedbesday night was disciplined, accurate in detail and highly musical in matters of phrasing and use of tone color. Departures from this fine standard of singing occurred, but were rare throughout the program.

The second performance will take place Friday at 8 p.m.

A delightfully proportioned and effective partnership is revealed in the opening Magnificat by Pergolesi, sung with small string ensemble and continuo led by violinist Susan Eddlemon. Fine chording, lovely tone color and well developed climaxes occur under Washburn's hands.

Benjamin Britten's richly woven Ceremony of Carols provides a charming combination of vocal ensemble sound with the single luminous obligato-like strand of Cathryn Ely's harp. Three pleasing soprano soloists are the choir's Elizabeth Brodovich, Monique Fortier and Lydia Kasianchuk.

Introduction of a harp solo by Ely provides a highlight. Her performance of the Appalachian carol, I Wonder as I Wander, is exquisite and moves one to wish that the harpist might more often emerge in symphony and other concerts.

Again, voices and a solo instrument are happily combined as the choir's double quartet sings three American carols to the sensitive accompaniment of guitarist Brian Townsend. Choir and ensemble are together again effectively in Buxtehude's In Dulci Jubilo, and the well chosen program ends with Washburn conducting the voices in an unaccompanied group.

The choice is four carols — Lute Book Lullaby, When Christ Was Born, O Little One Sweet and The Holly and the Ivy — each one mood evoking and expressively phrased and colored.

No Christmas program, it seems, is quite complete without a sing-along and this one floods the gothic arches with full-throated sound as three traditional carols are shared between Amity and its audience.

Chemical firm to pay for $124M clean-up?

WASHINGTON (UPI) — In the toughest action ever taken in a chemical dumping case, the government today asked a court to force Hooker Chemical Corp. to spend over $124 million to clean up New York's Love Canal and three other chemical waste sites in the area.

Barbara Blum, deputy administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, said the action "should serve notice to those who generate or handle hazardous wastes that these kinds of dangers no longer will be tolerated by the American public."

"The day of discarding hazardous materials indiscrimately and haphazardly is over," she said.

The Love Canal neighborhood in Niagara Falls, N.Y., is a community built on a World War II era dump site where nearly 200 families were forced from their homes by poisons that oozed through basement walls and onto lawns.

The Justice Department, acting on EPA's behalf, filed four suits, one of which would require Hooker to begin an immediate cleanup at Love Canal and to pay for medical studies of all the affected families in that neighborhood.

The other three suits affect Hooker operations in the Niagara Falls area.

One of those is the "Hyde Park" dump site that was singled out in congressional testimony as containing four times as much waste as the Love Canal dump.

Letter bombs again plague U.K. police

LONDON (Reuter) — Police defused another letter bomb today. It was the sixth letter bomb sent to a leading Briton in what police believe is a campaign by an Irish republican group.

The bomb was delivered to the home of Sir Charles Villiers, head of the state-owned Steel Corp.

His wife called the police when she noticed the package had a Belgian postmark. Other bombs that arrived this week were also posted in Belgium.

Two of the packages exploded in postal sorting offices without causing injuries. The other four, all addressed to industrialists or civil servants, were given to police before they were opened.

'Tis the season, even over lettergate: Bennett

By JAKE BANKY

Even the famous dirty tricks affair got a good word Wednesday from Premier Bill Bennett in a determinedly optimistic year-end interview.

"I must admit it's been an embarrassing time for the party but I think people like to see that in a democracy," said Bennett.

The affair has shaken up Social Credit but Bennett sees that as a blessing in disguise — it has forced party officials to take a more professional approach to their responsibilities.

The premier also admits he has also benefited from a little personal agitation.

"I need my adrenalin to be shaken up every so often myself," he said.

Bennett said in his opinion, Social Credit's public image has not been damaged by three months of lettergate, dirty tricks and revelations of mishandled party finances.

Rather, he said, the public spotlight now shifts to his political opponents.

"Now they (the public) have to worry how come the lid is always kept on other parties," he said.

And in the season of brotherly love, he managed a kind thought for the eight former aides and researchers who resigned or were fired as a result of dirty tricks.

"I see some good in everything and some good in everybody. People involved in the party, those that have been controversial, still have my friendship because I know the job they've done and I know their commitment to the province," Bennett said.

"I even see some good in my friends in the media," he added.

Bennett refuses to put a time limit on his own political future. He has said in the past he likely would step down during a third term as premier. Now he says:

"I see my future as being committed to results and resolving the things I set out to resolve, rather than an arbitrary timetable."

For example, Bennett said he has not done enough to provide reasonably-priced Crown land for British Columbians although it has always been one of his major goals.

"That program has been much slower than I had hoped," he said. "It's a more difficult task than I thought. I criticize myself for not pushing harder."

Bennett said much is being done to make land available but the results aren't dramatic "and people expect this government to be dramatic."

He said his land program will be given priority just as soon as he completes his energy policy.

Looking ahead to a new decade Bennett said: "British Columbians should be more optimistic than anybody anywhere in the world."

At the the same time, he said, they must learn to curb their energy requirements and accept the challenge to develop acceptable energy alternatives.

He foresees substantial increases in B.C.'s exports to the nations of the Pacific Rim but not to the biggest one of all, China.

"China does not offer in the immediate future the same opportunity that some of the other Pacific Rim countries offer," Bennett said.

In fact he sees China as a possible competitor.

"They are seeking to sell some of the resources that we do. They want to sell coal. They want to sell copper. They need the money to get development in their own country," he said.

Bennett said his proposed visit to China in 1980 has been put off indefinitely. He would love to visit China, he said, but it's no longer a priority item.

He has not scheduled any other trips abroad in the foreseeable future.

Still looking into his crystal ball Bennett predicts continued economic adjustment for B.C. in 1980, but 1981 through 1984 will be "substantial years of promise for B.C.," he said.

System trips handicapped

VANCOUVER (CP) — Poorly co-ordinated vocational services and inadequate aid are making it difficult for disabled job seekers in British Columbia, says a report released Wednesday.

The one-year study by the Social Planning and Review Council of B.C. also found a lack of employment opportunity programs, legislation that ignores the handicapped and physical barriers to working that make the job market even tougher for the disabled.

The private social service organization is recommending establishment of a provincial committee to co-ordinate vocational training and services to the handicapped.

The organization also wants amendments to the Human Rights Code of B.C. to protect the handicapped from discrimination, a university degree program for vocational rehabilitation counsellors and federal tax incentives to encourage employers to make buildings accessible and equipment adaptable to the handicapped.

B.C. Hydro general business offices will be closed December 24, 25 and 26 for the Christmas period, and on New Years Day, January 1.

Emergency and maintenance crews will be available throughout the period.

Before the judge

A 23-year-old woman was given a two-year-less-a-day jail sentence Wednesday in provincial court.

Katherine Lorraine Harper, formerly of 940 Forshaw, earlier pleaded guilty to 26 counts of false pretences, 17 of them in Alberta, and was remanded until Wednesday by Judge Harold Alder for a presentence report.

The Alberta bad cheques were passed between May and August this year and amounted to $4,132.86 while the nine Victoria counts were for bad cheques amounting to $1,500.15 passed between September, 1978, and February of this year.

Harper had three previous convictions for similar offences: on Nov. 8, 1975, in Victoria for two counts of uttering forged documents when she received concurrent 45-day jail terms and a year's probation; on March 16, 1976, in Victoria for seven counts of false pretences when she received $50 fines on each count and a year's probation; and on Aug. 21, 1978, in Victoria for three counts of false pretences when she received a suspended sentence and 18 months probation.

Crown counsel Don Laughton asked Alder to note the latest spree began Sept. 15, less than a month after she was placed on the last probation.

In rejecting defence lawyer Stephen Kelliher's argument for an intermittent (weekend) jail term so Harper could receive intensive psychiatric therapy, Alder said Laughton rightly stated the principles of sentencing. Laughton reminded the court that deterrence and the protection of the public should be considered as well as the rehabilitation of the convicted person.

Alder said the woman used a "definite and sophisticated approach" during her latest spree and said the 45-day jail sentence didn't help and the suspended sentence and 18 months probation not only didn't help, "but didn't last."

He imposed the two-year-less-a-day sentences on the seven indictable offences (four in Alberta and three in B.C.) and six-month terms for the remainder of the charges, all concurrent. He recommended psychiatric therapy for Harper while she is serving the sentence.

Judge William Ostler ordered a psychiatric examination for a 30-year-old Canadian Coast Guard employee.

Cory Peter McKay was charged with breaking and entering 1052 Craigflower, possession of a knife dangerous to the public peace, and causing bodily harm with intent to wound, maim, or disfigure.

Esquimalt police said a 59-year-old man was attacked in his own home about 7:30 a.m. Wednesday by a man who knocked and walked in.

McKay was remanded until Friday for the psychiatric examination to be completed.

Judge Gilbert Hogg handed out concurrent, three-month sentences to an 18-year-old who pleaded guilty to three drinking-driving charges and one count of refusing a breath test demand.

Hogg also recommended that Wayne Baron Tribull, 880 Craigflower, serve his time at the Alouette River unit for the treatment of alcoholism.

Tribull pleaded guilty to driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 Sept. 21, impaired driving and refusing a breath test demand Oct. 27, and driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 on Nov. 17.

On Sept. 21, Tribull was spotted driving on Superior near Douglas at about 2:30 a.m. and was stopped at Quadra and North Park. Breath test readings of .23 and .22 were obtained.

About 4:30 a.m. Oct. 27 he was found asleep in the front seat of his car, parked facing the wrong way in front of 1703 Burnside Road West.

On Nov. 17 about 5:50 p.m. Tribull was involved in a single-car accident at Bay near Ludgate. His vehicle was wedged up against a wire mesh fence after sideswiping a power pole. Readings on this occasion were .26 and .25.

★ ★ ★

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Robert Johnston Murray, 41, of 513 Judah, $400; Charles Montague McIntyre, 64, of 912 Dunford, $400; Steven Emmanuel Kerstein, 19, of 1228 Finlayson, $400; Daniel Alexander Duncan, 30, of Crofton, $400; Peter Warren Huckvale, 29, of 1182 Bewdley, $400; Michael Francois Gins, 18, of 121 Randall, $300; and Catherine Marie Mudrak, 18, of 2932 Deborah Place, $50.

Sven Johansson has been re-elected skipper of the Thermopylae Club.

Other officers elected were Joe Heald, first mate; John Jenkins, second mate; Ben Swindell, purser; Allison Holt, supercargo.

Bill Hawker, Duncan McKenzie and Bob Spearing are directors.

'Scandalous driving'

Steven Fletcher Ellingson, 21, was fined $500 in B.C. Supreme Court Wednesday after being found guilty by a jury of dangerous driving.

He had been accused of the more serious offence of criminal negligence causing the death of Cornelius Franciscus Everts, 33, but the jury found him not guilty of that charge.

Mr. Justice George Murray gave him three months to pay the fine, with three months in jail in default, and suspended his driver's licence for two years.

He told Ellingson that had it not been for the fact he lost the use of his right arm in the accident, he would have sentenced him to a short jail term "but you have suffered dreadfully from your scandalous driving."

Court was told Ellingson has lost the use of the arm for the rest of his life and now is unemployed.

The accident occurred March 4 when Ellingson was driving north on Patricia Bay Highway. At the provincial weigh scales at Elk Lake, his vehicle went out of control, veered to the left and struck two cars coming south. The dead man was in one of the southbound cars.

The jury deliberated two hours.

Jeremy Koekebakker will get to keep his parrot for Christmas after all. The parrot, after an anxious night at Toronto International Airport faced with death or deportation, will soon be on its way to Jeremy's home in Woodstock. The parrot is a Christmas gift from Jeremy' parents, Ron and Janice, who wanted to bring their six-year-old son something special back from their trip to Florida to soften his memories of a tornado which destroyed their home and Jeremy's pets last summer. When Jeremy chose an exotic $260 yellow-collared macaw, they just couldn't say no. At Toronto airport customs officials seized it but officials decided the parrot could go to Jeremy's home for quarantine. "We decided to make an exception in this case," said Dr. Bill Davis of the agriculture departments' health of animals branch. "These people apparently made the best efforts they could to find out what the regulations are and it looks like they have been given the wrong information all along the line."

Mrs. Gardner

An 18-month-old princess from Borneo arrived in Toronto for kidney treatment pioneered at Toronto Western Hospital. Princess Hourma, niece of the Sultan of Brunei, flew from London accompanied by Dr. John Balfe, a kidney specialist at the Hospital for Sick Children, where she will be treated for peritoneal dialysis.

Georgina Gerlitz has been up to her waist in garbage for the last two days, looking for $2,000 in Christmas money she accidentally threw out with the trash. "I scraped all year so I could buy gifts for my nephews and nieces," she said while sifting through the mounds of refuse at a dump in Nepean, not far from Ottawa. Fighting back tears and shivering in the -15 degrees Celsius cold, Gerlitz said she recovered $130 in torn bills with help from regional government employees but has not found any more.

When she left a Nashville hospital with her fifth child, Linda Gardner didn't bother checking the baby's name tag. A day later, she realized she had the wrong child. Mrs. Gardner, 27, said she left the hospital the day before with an infant she thought was Kevin Jason Gardner. Hospital officials realized a mistake had been made and returned Kevin to Mrs. Gardner.

abby

Dear Abby:

I'm a 22-year-old married woman with a problem I'm sure is not unique in these times.

Three years ago my father walked out on my mother, leaving her with a mortgage, two children to feed and clothe, and a stack of bills to pay. Of course he had a girlfriend, to whom he is now happily married.

Mother is understandably bitter. Her whole life has stopped since her divorce. She doesn't have any men friends, and refuses to make a new life for herself. Worse yet, she expects undivided loyalty from her children, which means not seeing or talking to our father and his wife.

Abby, I am not condoning Dad's actions, but I cannot write him off as though he were dead — which is what Mother wants me to do. He was good to me when I was growing up, and as long as he's living I want to keep in touch with him now and then. Some day he may not be around, and I want no regrets.

Mother keeps hassling me to promise never to talk to Dad again, and I just can't make that promise.

Troubled

Dear Troubled:

You're not wrong. Your mother got a dirty deal, and I feel sorry for her, but no one has the right to tell another whom they shall see or to whom they may speak.

Dear Abby:

I have met a lady and we are thinking of marriage.

What I need to know is this: is it proper to have my late wife's rings made over, using the same diamonds but set in new mountings? Or should I buy new rings?

If I use the stones, should I tell the lady?

Stumped

Dear Stumped:

It is not necessary to buy new rings. Use the same diamonds in new mountings. And there is no need to tell the lady — unless she asks.

Dear Abby:

Each Christmas I mail a gift to a friend in another province. She sends me one, too, and I always send her a prompt 'thank you' to let her know I received and appreciated her gift.

Last year, she did not acknowledge my gift. I was going to ask in a letter to her (several months later) if she ever received my gift since I had paid to insure it and still had the receipt.

Would it be wrong to ask if she ever got it?

Me

Dear Me:

Not in my book. A person who 'forgets' to acknowledge a gift could use a little embarrassment. (P. S. Write and tell her that the gift was insured, so if it wasn't received it could be replaced without additional expense.)

Tourtiere a tradition of taste

By PAT DUFOUR

In many French-Canadian homes Christmas Eve will be the time when homemakers outdo each other in providing traditional culinary spreads that have stood the test of time.

After the traditional messe de minuit (Midnight Mass) will come the reveillon de Noel, starting off with a huge family dinner, followed by dancing and party games until daybreak.

Recipes handed down from generation to generation will have been used to create the meat pies, doughnuts and other dishes that have become synonoymous with the annual celebration.

You do not have to be of French-Canadian extraction to enjoy these time-tested favorites.

Tourtiere, as an example, I've found to be a life-saver on Christmas Eve when last-minute gift wrapping and calls on friends become time-stealers. It can be cooked a few days ahead, refrigerated, and popped in the oven for reheating.

This recipe makes two pies and serves eight or 10. If you only need one pie at a time the other can be frozen and reheated, say on New Year's Eve. Here's the recipe.

TOURTIERE

3 pounds of ground pork
2 onions, finely chopped
3 cloves of garlic, minced
Salt and pepper to taste
1 teaspoon of savory (or to taste)
1 teaspoon of ground cloves (or to taste)
1 cup of bread crumbs
Pastry for 2 nine-inch, double-crust pies.

Combine all ingredients except bread crumbs in a large saucepan. Add enough water to barely cover and simmer for 30 minutes, stirring frequently.

Add bread crumbs toward end of cooking time to soak up fat and moisture.

Divide filling between two pastry-lined pie dishes and cover with pastry, pricking tops and bottoms with a fork.

Bake in a 500 degree Fahrenheit oven for 10 minutes. Reduce heat to 375 degrees and bake another 30 to 40 minutes or until golden brown.

Pate a la rapture or "rapee pie" is an Acadian specialty that is still served on festive occasions in some parts of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. This recipe makes 10 to 12 servings.

RAPEE PIE

1 5-pound fowl, cut up
3 medium onions
1 medium carrot
1 celery stalk
2 teaspoons of salt
½ pound of finely diced salt pork
15 medium potatoes (about 8 pounds).

Cook fowl, onions, carrot, celery and salt in water to cover. Bring to boil and skim. Simmer until meat is tender, about 2½ hours.

Remove skin and bones and cut meat in pieces. Strain broth. Fry salt pork until crisp. Peel potatoes and grate very fine or puree in an electric blender.

Working with about 1 cup of potato at a time, squeeze it in a clean dish towel to remove as much liquid as possible. Save the liquid.

Empty potato into large bowl. (At this stage potato feels like snow). Measure liquid and discard; measure an equal amount of chicken broth, bring to boil and gradually stir into potato to mix thoroughly (potato will swell).

Spread a layer of potato mixture in bottom of greased roasting pan (15 by 20 inches) and cover with a layer of chicken. Repeat layers until dish is full, ending with potato. Sprinkle with salt pork.

Bake at 400 degrees Fahrenheit until top starts to brown (30 minutes). Turn oven control to 350 degrees and continue baking until brown and crusty (2 hours).

Croquignoles are rich doughnuts traditionally served in Quebec during the Christmas holidays. This recipe makes between 3 to 4 dozen.

CROQUIGNOLES

⅓ cup butter
1 cup sugar
4 eggs
1 teaspoon vanilla
4 cups sifted all-purpose flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon nutmeg
½ cup light cream
Icing sugar.
Cream butter and sugar.

Beat in eggs, one at a time and add vanilla. Sift dry ingredients and stir in alternately with cream. The dough is very soft. Chill at least 3 hours to firm.

Working with a quarter of the dough at a time, roll to ⅛-inch thickness. Cut in ½-inch strips, 7 inches long. Twist each strip, fold in half and pinch ends firmly together.

Fry in deep fat (375 degrees) until golden brown. Drain on crumpled paper. Dust with icing sugar if desired.

Creme brulee quebecoise is an uncomplicated dessert that can be whipped up in a hurry during these busy days. This recipe serves six.

CREME BRULEE QUEBECOISE

4½ tablespoons cornstarch
3 cups milk
¾ cup molasses
½ teaspoon almond extract
½ cup whipping cream, whipped.

Blend cornstarch and milk in top of double boiler. Cook, stirring constantly, until smooth and thickened. Cover and cook 5 minutes, stirring occasionally.

Boil molasses until it has a faint odor of burnt sugar and is slightly caramelized (310 degrees).

Cool slightly and add gradually to milk mixture, heating until smooth and creamy.

Strain, add almond extract and pour into molds or serving dishes. Chill until firm. Serve with whipped cream.

And, if you're looking for some relief from the oodles of fruit cake and other goodies you'll be facing in the next few days, there's always the good old standby of baked beans, cooked Quebec style. The recipe serves six.

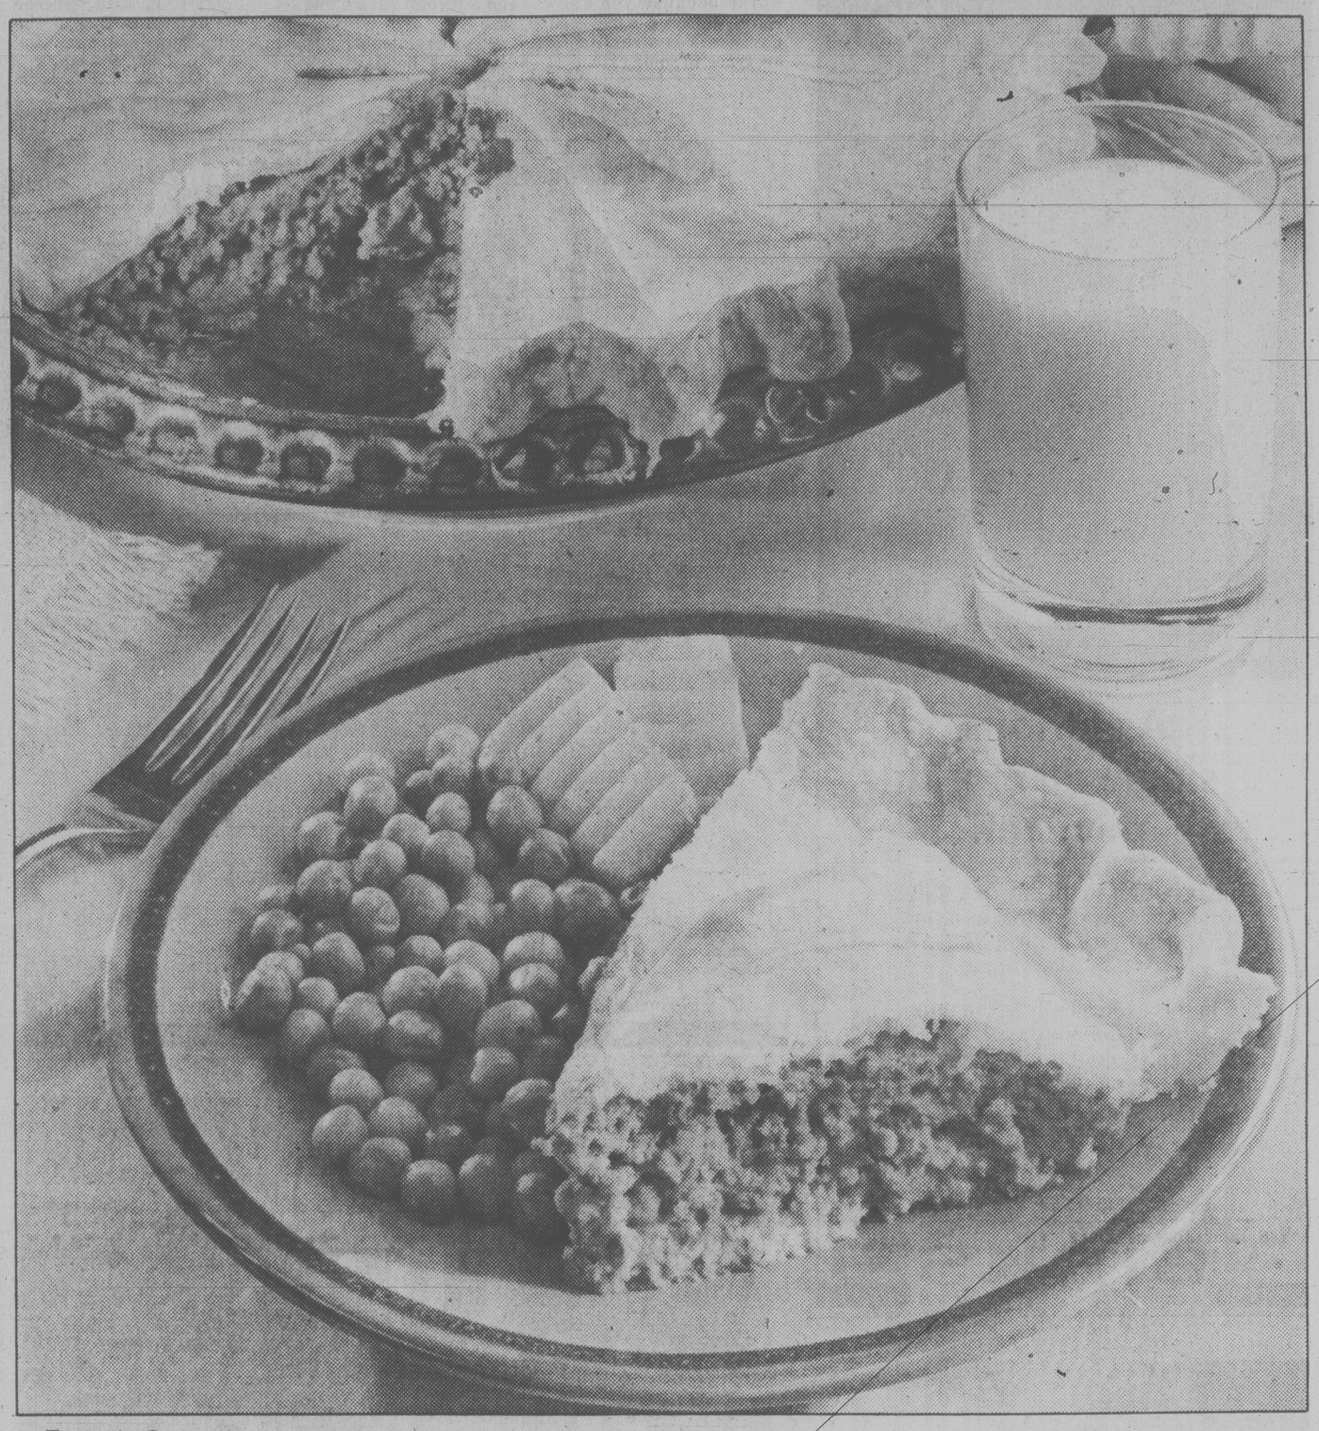
BAKED BEANS

2 cups white navy beans
6 cups cold water
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup chopped onion
½ pound salt pork
¼ cup brown sugar
½ cup molasses
1 teaspoon dry mustard
¼ teaspoon pepper
1 teaspoon salt.

Wash beans, add cold water and soak overnight. Next day, add 1 teaspoon of salt, bring to boil and simmer until the skins split when blown on gently (about 30 minutes). Drain beans and save liquid.

Pour half the beans in 2-quart bean pot and sprinkle with onion. After scoring rind, place pork skin side up on beans. Add remaining beans, allowing rind of pork to show.

Combine remaining ingredients with 2 cups of the bean liquid and pour over beans (liquid should cover beans). Cover and bake 6 to 7 hours at 250 degrees, adding more liquid if required. Uncover for last 30 minutes of cooking.



French-Canadian ground pork pie can be made right now for Christmas Eve this coming Monday

Community should act on 'flu shots

By DR. L.L. COLEMAN

Each year, at about this time, when the cold season is in full force, the question comes up as to the advantages and disadvantages of vaccination against influenza. There are some patients who are absolutely certain that last year the injection of the flu vaccine spared them colds, infections and bronchial problems.

There are others who insist that, after an injection of the influenza vaccine, they came down with an infection which they felt was caused by the vaccine. There are still others who believe that they got no protection.

With such diversity of reaction, it is understandable that there is a great deal of confusion over what to do about the vaccine.

From the scientific point of view, influenza viruses have many classifications and subdivisions. Consequently, it is difficult to create a single vaccine that will protect against all types of influenza viruses.

The vaccine that is being used this year is aimed specifically against three viruses that are known as the Hong Kong, the Texas and the Brazil viruses. Dr. Joseph W. Shands, Jr., professor of infectious diseases at the University of Florida College of Medicine, believes that vaccination is important and recommends it for older persons, especially those past the age of 65.

It is especially important for people who have heart problems that are associated with vascular conditions. People who have lung conditions — such as bronchitis, emphysema and other related pulmonary problems — would benefit markedly from vaccination.

Patients with diabetes, severe anemia and kidney disease should also have the advantage of the vaccination.

If immunization is to be given, it should be done before there is an outbreak of influenzal infections in the community. At the same time that one seeks the opinion of one's doctor, it would be wise to inquire about the new vaccine now being used with great success against certain types of pneumonia.

Dear Doctor:

I had an X-ray of my chest by my company doctor. He found that I had an extra rib. I am 32. Could this cause me trouble when I get older?

Mr. T.I.

Dear Mr. I.:

In the absence of any symptoms, there is no reason why you should live in dread that you will eventually be bothered by this extra rib. On rare occasions, the doctor discovers an extra cervical rib during a routine X-ray of the chest. When pain can definitely be traced to such a rib, it can be removed surgically.

Getting together is tougher

OTTAWA (CP) — The changing family unit makes Christmas a difficult time for many people, says Dr. Gary Powell, an Ottawa psychiatrist.

Today's mobile population puts hundreds of miles between parents and children, he said. Trying to get to your parents' home for Christmas might cost you an expensive plane trip and a week of holidays.

But when the rush is over, most people feel it was worth it.

"If you want to be cynical about Christmas," he said, "there's a lot out there to prove your point."

Most people expect to feel good at Christmas.

"But if you don't feel good, you end up feeling even worse because you know you're supposed to feel good. Christmas is stressful for everyone to some extent.

"The people I see every day are people who are more sensitive to stress. Christmas is hard for them.

"People feel more sensitive about being alone at a time when everyone else is supposed to be feeling warm and cuddly.

"For most of us, there was a time in our lives when Christmas was great, probably when we were children and felt comfortable and secure."

He said remembering past Christmas holidays reawakens memories of good times. He suggested that if you're feeling sad at Christmas, don't fight your feelings but try to understand them.

If you don't have family or friends to visit, says Dr. Susan Dotzenroth, an Ottawa psychologist, you should get out and help others.

"Try to be with someone on Christmas Day," she said. "There are many people who spend it alone."

Christmas bash for shopping bag gals

(Editor's note: Manhattan's "Shopping Bag Ladies" — the destitute women who carry their belongings in a shopping bag and live in the streets, in doorways, in subway entrances and on park benches — are a part of New York life. And they're finally being recognized. Now, they'll have their own Christmas party. UPI's Gail Collins has this special report.)

By GAIL COLLINS

There is going to be a Christmas party for the shopping bag ladies.

"Now isn't that nice," says Ella, who is busy changing her underwear in the lobby of Grand Central Station. "I'll just see if I can find something nice to wear."

"Why don't you invite God, too?" chirps Sally, whose main residence is under a bannister at Penn Station.

The New York shopping bag ladies are an institution. They live in the streets, lugging their possessions along in crammed shopping bags, propelled by their own particular ghosts.

Sister Jonah, a young black nun who tours Grand Central Station at 5 a.m. to check for shopping bag ladies in distress, is passing the word about the Christmas party at the railroad stations and breadlines.

"Their endurance is amazing," says Sister Jonah, as she races to catch up with a shopping bag lady who is trotting down the street at dawn. "In some ways they're so ill, but they walk for miles a day, and some of them carry 50 pounds of stuff in those bags with them."

Not everyone is in the holiday spirit. The little old lady who comes to the breadline in a bathrobe and slippers won't even stop to talk. Her only possession appears to be an empty cable spool.

"She's just going to die," says Sarah, a cheerful round lady who greets everyone with an elaborate bow. "You give that woman a coat and she throws it in the gutter."

The less troubled shopping bag ladies, however, enjoy a taste of the good life — be it a Christmas party or a clean room for the night.

"We had one lady who took her social security check and checked into a $40-a-night hotel," says Sister Jonah. "Her money ran out after three days, but it was her moment of glory, I guess."

Times are tough this Christmas for the vague and muddled ladies who curl up in the city's doorways and bus stations.

There was a time when some of the cannier ladies would seek out a mental hospital for the winter months, returning to the streets with the warm weather. These days, however, most hospitals will not admit them unless they appear to be dangerous. The cheap hotels that are the last refuge.

"The place I stayed at last week didn't even have blankets for the beds," says Ella, as she packs her underwear into a plastic bag. "You know what it cost me? Twenty-five dollars a day."

The nuns of the Dwelling Place, a hostel on West 40th Street, are one of the few groups that keeps track of the ladies — like Gloria, who lived in a vacant lot through five winters until the city cleaned her boxes away, and Jennie, who is busy digging a hole that will serve as her cold-weather home.

Gloria, who now lives, off and on, at the Dwelling Place, will be there for the Christmas party, as will Miriam, one of the "fashionable" shopping bag ladies. Miriam wears high-heeled red slippers despite her swollen ankles, and props herself against the wall for support as she walks along the street.

"Some of the ladies are into styles," says Sister Nancy. "If we don't have the kind of clothes they'd like, they'll freeze before they'll take something else."

Most of the ladies, however, tend toward what the nuns call "the layered look," wearing their entire wardrobes summer and winter.

There is an Upper West Side bag lady who wraps herself in a large green plastic trash bag in wet weather. She shuffles along pulling her possessions behind her — a very large bag dragging several smaller ones.

Delores carries three bags that contain nothing but newspapers, which she reads word for word, and then tosses away. "She isn't hoarding them," says Sister Nancy. "She's just a slow reader."

Party times are scarce on the streets of Manhattan where bag ladies live

Nutritionist advises:

Concentrate on people

UNIVERSITY PARK, Pa. (UPI) — People who try to lose weight during the holidays may be disappointed when they look at their scales on Jan. 2.

"If you're trying to lose weight between Christmas and New Year's, you're probably setting an unrealistic goal," said Marian I. Hammond, assistant professor of nutrition at Pennsylvania State University. "It's very difficult to achieve, and you may feel guilty if you don't.

"Look at the holidays as a time to maintain your weight — not lose it. If you can maintain it in the face of increased social pressure and opportunities to eat and drink, you've won a great moral victory."

Hammond, co-ordinator of Penn State's Nutrition clinic and Consultation Center, said persons on an exercise program can increase their daily routine to help compensate for increased caloric intake and that those who overeat one day can cut back their food comsumption the next.

She said, in addition, people can use a variety of strategies in social situations to help keep their weight constant.

"If you're going to a dinner party at 8 p.m., you may want to adjust you caloric budget by eating less at breakfast and lunch," she said. "But if may be wise to have a small snack of, say, 100 to 150 calories, at your normal dinner hour so you won't be famished by the time you arrive."

She said it is also important for weight-conscious persons to prepare themselves mentally for holiday social gatherings by setting realistic goals in terms of food consumption, evaluating the food choices available and choosing according to plan.

"First of all, figure out why you're going," she said. "If it's because the hostess has a reputation for delectable food, that's one thing. But if you want mainly to socialize with people, there's less reason for feeling compelled to stuff yourself.

"So if you're planning mainly to talk with people, do it away from the food table, Concentrate on people, not food."

She advised to evaluate the drinks, the appetizers and the main dishes, and decide which of the three is most important, and cut back in the other two areas.

"Don't be shy about being selective and refusing certain foods or drinks," she said. "Increasing public awareness that 'thinner is healthier' is making people much more sensitve to the wishes of those who don't want to gain weight."

One-stop shopping to save gas may not save much cash unless you know what you paid for items that now need to be replaced. A discount store may charge more for household cleaners but less for cosmetics. And a supermarket may have lower prices on cleaning items and higher tags on cosmetics. Jot down prices of items on your shopping list and do some comparing.

Collecting empty aluminum cans is even more profitable now that the price has increased to 23 cents or more per pound. It takes about 23 cans to make a pound. Some metal salvage companies accept aluminum pans from frozen foods, too. Call a local metal salvage company for more particulars.

Green tomatoes fallen from the vine or threatened by bad weather were made into relishes "down on the farm." Less time consuming: Substitute green tomatoes for tart apples in an apple pie recipe.

Or, freeze green tomatoes in thick chunks or slices for off-season "fried green tomatoes." Freeze on a cookie sheet; plop into a freezer bag.

You'll be seeing more brass trims on chairs, chests and large pieces of new furniture. The brass may be beautiful but be aware of wear areas.

Will the brass be rubbed much, scratched easily? If so, you can't polish out scratches on lacquered brass. The lacquer must eventually be removed with chemicals that might affect the wood's finish.

Eat wisely to avoid Yule calorie chaos

nutrition matters

Christmas and calories simply go together. It's really difficult for calorie-watchers to stick to a diet during the festive season with all its special traditions of food and drink. We recognize that it's hard to say "no" — especially if these special treats are around just once a year. It's inevitable that you're going to eat more calories than usual over the next week or so. But you don't have to lose complete control. Perhaps these few hints will help you survive the holidays!

— Eat slowly. Special dinners and holiday fare are usually more elegant anyway — linger over the various courses and enjoy each bite. You'll find you eat less if you eat more slowly — and you won't feel the need to snack later on.

— Start making a savings on your calories now. Eat a little less — beginning today. Even a few calories saved each day will cut down on weight gain. If you know you're going out to a huge dinner at night, cut down on calories at breakfast and lunch.

— Don't get overtired. The strain and stress of holiday shopping and festivities puts an added burden on our system and we tend to overeat when we're tired or depressed — thinking that we're never going to get everything done in time.

— Don't grab food on the run. If you're shopping, make a point of sitting down in a restaurant — order something light rather than grabbing a high sugar snack for quick energy.

— Serve a buffet at a dinner party. You won't be as tempted to eat as much as you would at a sit-down dinner. (Stay far away from the serving table once all the food is out.)

— Work out dinner schedules with parents and friends. We know of one young couple who have to eat two holiday dinners on one day! Why not suggest alternate years at parents houses. Or suggest a light brunch with one set, and dinner with the other.

— Don't nibble when you're doing the cooking or Christmas baking. Allow yourself one treat when all the baking for the day is completed.

— Get rid of those tempting leftovers. The leftover stuffing, or slice of pie will only tempt you the next day. Give them to your departing guests instead, or place them immediately in the freezer!

— Watch your alcohol intake. Why not switch to a glass of soda water with a twist of lime as a cocktail. Your tummy (and your head) will feel better the next day. Or ask for a spritzer — half wine, half soda — or hot mulled cider.

— Don't nibble on high calorie munchies at parties. If you're the host — put out nuts in the shell, lots of tangerine slices or fresh grapes, raw vetetables with a curried yogurt dip, cheese and whole wheat crackers, plain popcorn flavored with garlic, or parmesan cheese, tiny kabobs of ham, cheese, or a cherry tomato with a smoked oyster, corn chips with avocado dip. Again, limit the amount you nobble.

We hate to do it. But here's a guide to show how many calories your holiday favorites are going to cost you.

Buffet meals can cut holiday intake considerably

Roast Turkey (4 oz.)	208	Dry red wine (3½ oz.)	86
Bread stuffing (½ cup)	300	Gin, rum, whiskey (1½ oz.)	115
Gravy (4 tablespoons)	125	Candy cane (1)	200

Brown and serve roll (1 pat margarine)	156	Potato chips (10)	115
Ham (3 oz.)	330	Tangerine (	40
Creamed onions (½ cup)	115	Cranberry Sauce (2 tablespoons)	50
Candied sweet potatoes (½ cup)	280
Turnip (1 cup)	35
Fruit Cake (1 small piece)	115

Jerome quits politics

Some familiar faces will be missing from election posters next year, including that of Commons Speaker James Jerome.

Jerome, the first opposition Commons Speaker, said Wednesday he will not run for Parliament in the Feb. 18 federal election and instead, will be given a federal appointment.

Jerome, Speaker in the last Parliament and Liberal MP for Sudbury, would not speculate on the possibility he is in line for an appointment to the bench of the Federal Court.

He did say, however, he will be given a federal appointment to be announced by Prime Minister Joe Clark. There also has been speculation he could be named an ambassador.

Jerome said his decision not to run after holding the Sudbury seat since 1968 was the result "of a combination of things."

Another Liberal, former cabinet minister Hugh Faulkner has also said he won't run in the Feb. 18 election.

Faulkner, 46, told a news conference he made the decision because his family takes top priority. He has two sons and his wife is expecting a third child in June.

He held Peterborough riding for the Liberals from 1965 until he was defeated in last May's election. He moved to Montreal after the defeat.

The last Grit dropout is Donald Macdonald, touted as a candidate for the leadership of the federal Liberal party.

Macdonald announced Wednesday he will not be a candidate but held out the prospect that he may decide in the future to re-enter politics.

"As to the future, we'll have to wait and see," he said. "After the experience of the last few months, I've learned that 'never' is a very strong word."

ELECTION 80

Macdonald said that if Trudeau does quit within the next few years and if he is approached to run, he'll think about it.

Macdonald, 47, refused to say why he decided not to run.

In the Tory camp, the major loss may turn out to be Transport Minister Don Mazankowski who says he may not seek re-election in the Vegreville constituency he has represented for 11 years.

Henry Wilson, president of Mazankowski's constituency association, said the minister seemed very frustrated by the defeat of the Progressive Conservative government when he was in the riding last weekend.

He said the minister's "nerves are thin anyway" after six months of hard work as a cabinet minister.

Wilson said he hopes Mazankowski will decide to run again, but believes he will not.

Finally, Brian Mulroney, former Progressive Conservative president and one of the best known Tories in Quebec, has said he will not be running either.

Prime Minister Clark announced that Mulroney, candidate in the party leadership race won by Clark in 1976, told him he will not run because of personal reasons and contractual obligations.

Mulroney now is president of the Iron Ore Co. of Canada in Montreal. He did not run in the May 22 election.

Budget back if PCs win

By PETER HADEKEL
FP News Service

MONTREAL — Finance Minister John Crosbie vowed Wednesday to reintroduce "every dot and comma" in his budget if the Conservative government is re-elected February 18.

The tough-talking Crosbie, whose budget brought down the government, came out swinging at his Liberal and NDP opponents during a luncheon speech to the Canadian Club.

He said the Liberals forced the election because "they want to get back to the gravy" and he dismissed the NDP as "a nuisance."

"They're like snow white and the seven dwarfs, except they don't have snow white."

Crosbie defended his budget by saying most businessmen and academics he consulted said reducing the federal deficit was the main priority for the Canadian economy.

Budgetary deficits over the last five years alone have totalled $46.5 billion and if nothing is done to reverse the trend, "anyone with any sense would pack up and leave" to invest elsewhere, Crosbie said.

The Canadian people would be committing "economic suicide" if they did not tackle the issues of national debt, depleting energy resources and the weakened Canadian dollar he said.

Crosbie's message to the business audience was that his tough budget was necessary to rectify years of economic mismanagement by the Trudeau government.

"Canadians are a common sense people. I am hopeful that over the next few weeks, when all the dust has settled, they will be able to see this budget clearly."

He said the Liberal government had enacted $9 billion worth of tax cuts over the last few years, leaving the federal government today with little room to manoeuver.

While the Liberals are criticizing the budget for its lack of economic stimulation, they are the ones who "used up all the stimulation," said Crosbie.

"We're in a strait-jacket because he (Trudeau) left us in a strait jacket," said Crosbie.

The Liberals forced the election because "the Gallup poll sent them into heat" Crosbie said in referring to the recent poll giving the Liberals a 19 per cent lead over the Conservatives.

"The Gallup fly has replaced the Spanish fly."

Court quashes $1M dream for Lottario ticket thief

TORONTO (CP) — James Nicholas's dreams of owning expensive suits, a Jaguar and a $100,000 home in Grenada came to an abrupt end Wednesday when he was found guilty of stealing more than $1 million from a friend.

County Court Judge George Ferguson ruled that Nicholas, 45, of Strathroy, Ont., stole $1,278,127.50 from Megeri Ede, who had won it in the form of the largest Lottario prize ever awarded.

In his judgment, Ferguson said he did not believe a word of Nicholas's story about holding the money in trust for his friend or having the intention to give it back.

"I find Mr. Nicholas's explanation for his actions incapable of belief," Ferguson said. "In the course of playing his roles as a millionaire, he became convinced he was a millionaire. And having convinced himself he was a millionaire, Mr. Nicholas decided to become a thief."

Ede testified he gave his winning ticket from the April 28 Lottario draw to his friend on the clear understanding that Nicholas was to pick up the money for him for a fee and divert any publicity from the real winner.

Nicholas picked up the money and bore the brunt of the publicity but then deposited the money in a Toronto bank account in his own name.

Ede eventually reported the money stolen. When Nicholas was arrested at a hotel near Toronto International Airport, police found evidence that he was planning to leave the country and have the money transferred to him in Grenada.

Nicholas testified he was holding the money in trust on behalf of a charitable foundation set up by Ede to build a hospital in his native Nigeria. He said his reluctance to give the money back to Ede was based in part on a fear that the doctor would put it to personal use rather than go ahead with the construction of the hospital.

But Ferguson, who will sentence Nicholas today, called Nicholas's story "fanciful, carefully rehearsed and orchestrated."

The end of the criminal case brings Ede a step closer to actually getting the money. Last summer, the Ontario Supreme Court ordered it paid into the accounts of the court pending resolution of the dispute over who owns it. That now is before a civil court.

Clark eyes revamp of federal revenue sharing

SPRUCE GROVE, Alta. — Prime Minister Clark said Wednesday the federal government is losing its ability to manage the country's economy, necessitating an "urgent re-examination" of current federal-provincial sharing of revenues.

Clark told 700 party supporters in his home riding of Yellowhead in this oil-rich province "the uneven distribution of resource revenues" is a major cause of the problem.

The statement appeared to be a departure from Clark's oft-stated view that Canada is a "community of communities" with strong emphasis on provincial over federal powers.

"The government of Canada has the primary responsibility for managing the national economy," Clark said.

"It is also a basic principle of Canadian federalism to alleviate disparities among regions so that all provinces can provide a reasonable level of services to their residents."

Clark said that if re-elected, a Progressive Conservative government would launch a new study of federal-provincial revenue-sharing—similar to that of the Rowell-Sirois royal commission which examined the issue and reported in 1940.

He said he would be willing to have either a federal-provincial study conducted or one done simply by Ottawa.

"We must face the fact that the federal government is not as able as it should be to manage the national economy, to help overcome regional disparities and to conduct major national policies," Clark said.

He noted that the Economic Council of Canada said in a recent report that unless federal-provincial action is taken on the revenue-sharing problem, "the government's management of the economy will become increasingly powerless, to the peril of the country as a whole and the welfare of every Canadian."

Clark aides said they expected the news to be welcomed by Ontario Premier William Davis who has balked at Clark's proposal to raise energy prices. Davis, a strong Clark supporter during the May 22 campaign, has complained that higher revenues would flow from his province to Alberta as a result of new energy prices.

Clark aides underscored the importance they attached to the annoucement by distributing copies of the speech in advance — a rare occurence on the prime minister's tour.

Earlier in the day, Clark told reporters he will concentrate his attack in the Feb. 18 election campaign more on the NDP than in the last campaign.

"We were surprised by a few losses to the NDP last time," Clark said. For that reason, he would be telling voters it was the Trudeau government's concessions to the NDP in 1972-74 that gave birth to the burgeoning federal spending deficit.

Today, Clark travels to Vancouver where he will unveil his long-awaited proposal on Petro-Canada.

It is expected he will backtrack considerably from his initial pledge that the state-owned oil company be sold outright to the private sector.

Trudeau aiming to woo the West

WINNIPEG (CP) — Pierre Trudeau sought to make good today on his promise to make Western Canada more at home with the Liberal party by kicking off his fifth election campaign in Winnipeg.

The 60-year-old former prime minister will arrive here today to begin campaigning for the Feb. 18 election as a symbolic gesture of the party's commitment to the western provinces.

Trudeau pledged a greater effort to win support in the West when he announced his decision to scrap retirement plans earlier this week. The Liberals, often accused of being insensitive to western problems, elected only three MPs west of Ontario May 22.

Winnipeg Liberal MP Lloyd Axworthy conceded Wednesday the meeting of Prairie party workers was heavy on symbolism "but that's been very important in Western Canada."

"We have to make some very important demonstrations of our concern, and you can do that with these sorts of things," said Axworthy, touted as a possible party leadership contender.

Vancouver Liberal MP Art Phillips said he didn't think the party would increase its support by promising to dole out handouts for the region in a new government.

"The West doesn't think that way," he said. "The way you attract people in the West is to say this is how we're going to include you in the decision-making process."

Meanwhile, in Montreal, NDP leader Ed Broadbent focused his election campaign on energy policy, charging that Conservative plans to raise oil and gasoline prices prove Prime Minister Clark is just "a Liberal in a hurry."

During campaign stops in Montreal and Halifax, Broadbent advocated a major expansion in the role of Petro-Canada, the govenment oil company, controls on multinational oil company prices and a freeze on energy prices this winter.

The Liberals were also committed to raising energy prices before their electoral defeat May 22. After less than seven months in office, the Clark government proposed enery price increases that contributed to their defeat in the Commons last week.

The NDP leader said the planned increases would cost Altlantic Canada $1.1 billion by 1984 while recently approved increases in natural gas exports would heat all the homes in the region for 50 years.

But Broadbent refused to tell reporters whether the NDP supports higher fuel costs after the winter, saying he didn't want to close off his options.

However, the party would vote against another minority Conservative government if it re-introduced its budget proposals for higher energy prices in a new Parliament.

Broadbent soars with 'Frigidair'

MONTREAL (UPC) — The New Democratic Party's election campaign officially got off the ground Wednesday when leader Ed Broadbent jetted from Halifax in his chartered DC-9.

Within 30 minutes, the jet was officially dubbed "Frigidair."

Wednesday, Broadbent had been forced to cancel a speaking engagement because the plane was delayed two hours while it was de-iced.

"Somehow Frigidair seems appropriate for a February campaign," said a party aide.

Only nine months ago in the last federal campaign, Broadbent dubbed his jet "Doctrinair" in deference to newspaper editorial accusations that Broadbent was a doctrinaire socialist.

Denticare details by next month?

British Columbians may know by next month the form and timing of the dental care plan promised with fanfare at last spring's opening of the provincial legislature.

Health Minister Rafe Mair, a newcomer to the ministry in November, said in a recent interview that while work is still being done on the proposed program, the "style and timing will be settled within the next month."

Mair rejected reports that details of the program, which formed part of the Social Credit election platform last May, have already been decided.

"Firstly, we haven't got a precise plan, and secondly, we haven't got the financial go-ahead yet," he said.

Mair said there is no question the government is committed to implementing a plan, designed to cover only persons without current dental programs, before the next election.

"It will be sooner rather than later," he said, giving no further details.

"A denticare program has serious financial implications and structural problems," he said. "You just can't throw one together."

Mair said the program still requires approval of the treasury board, the committee of ministers with control over the public purse, and final sanction by cabinet.

Since the plan was announced in a one-line skeleton phrase, ministers have been reluctant to add many details.

Premier Bill Bennett said in August the plan was a priority for early 1980.

It will be an extension of private insurance programs, not in competition with them, and is expected to cover those not already benefitting from employer-provided dental programs. That would be about half of the province's 2.4 million residents.

Patients will have to pay substantial shares of their bills, perhaps between 20 to 50 per cent. The program is expected to provide only basic coverage such as extractions and fillings.

Mair would not comment on recent reports that the plan will include a $100 deductible clause for each person in a family, which means families would be expected to cover the first $100 spent on dental care for each person.

The report also said the government would then pay about 80 per cent of the next $600.

"Some of that is accurate, and some is not, and only one of the options being considered," Mair said.

Family court simpler: A-G

Attorney-General Allan Williams says he hopes the latest court ruling on B.C.'s Family Relations Act turns out to be an improper interpretation.

Judge Terry Shupe of Kamloops provincial court has ruled that maintenance orders issued by the B.C. supreme court or a county court cannot be enforced by the family court system.

Williams said he has not read the judgement.

"When we see the reasons we'll ecide whether that's a proper interpretation of the legislation," he said. "If it is not, I would think there would be an appeal."

The minister added: "It may be the judge is perfectly right and maintenance orders made in superior courts will have to be enforced there. I hope not, because the process is a little simpler in the family court."

Until Judge Shupe's ruling, maintenance orders have been enforced by family courts, no matter where they originated.

"I hope it continues that way because the family court is more accessible and it is our intention that family law matters be simplified as much as possible," said Williams.

The minister said this is not a constitutional issue as was the case in recent court decisions on two other sections of the act. The government has referred those decisions to the B.C. court of appeal.

Williams also said whatever the outcome of Judge Shupe's ruling, it willl not affect Human Resources Minister Grace McCarthy's plan to establish a debt collection agency to enforce maintenance payments.

B.C. providing freight service

The provincial government has moved to fill the void created by the loss of the CP Rail's tug, barge and trucks service to British Columbia's north coast, Premier Bill Bennett said Wednesday.

He said the B.C. Ferry Corp. is putting the Queen of Surrey on the north coastal route to supplement the service provided by the Queen of Prince Rupert.

Bennett said he will discuss the situation with Transportation Minister Alex Fraser.

The suspension will affect about 85 workers of which 20 are CP Rail employees and will be relocated. The others likely will be without jobs.

Drydock contract to Japan rapped

VANCOUVER (CP) — The B.C. and Yukon Building Trades Council has condemned the federal government for awarding a $50-million contract to a Japanese company for construction of a floating drydock for Burrard Yarrows Corp.

The council said a Canadian consortium's bid, a proposal involving pontoons made of concrete instead of the usual steel, was rejected in favor of the Japanese tender.

The council also is angered that Ottawa plans to contribute $28.8 million toward the Japanese firm's project.

"It is inconceivable that in this time of major economic difficulty, with the coming prospect of major unemployment, that a government supposedly representing the people of Canada, would let a major project and an estimated one-quarter of a million man-days of productive labor slip through its fingers," said Roy Gauthier, council president.

He said the council is demanding the government take a second look at the awarding of the contract.

Colin Snell of the Carpenters Union told the Vancouver and District Labor Council Tuesday that the building trades council had obtained a new release from Stevenson Construction Ltd., one of the principals in the Canadian consortium's bid.

Snell quoted the statement as saying that a government official told Stevenson that if the company cut its bid by 10 per cent, it would be five per cent below the Japanese bid. This could not be done, the statement said.

Michael Degelder, Stevenson general manager, said the statement was a draft news release and the company will have nothing to say on the matter until later this week.

The proposed floating drydock will be big enough to handle large ocean-going vessels of up to 150,000 tons.

Burrard Yarrows also bid on construction of the drydock, but claimed that to build it would prevent the shipyard from carrying out shipbuilding and repairs for two years.

Wendy's leaving to find work

VANCOUVER (CP) — Wendy King, the convicted bawdy house keeper whose clientele book caused a lot of prominent people to squirm until a judge ruled it sealed, is leaving town.

Provincial court Judge Darrell Jones lifted a probationary order Wednesday requiring King to remain within his court's jurisdiction.

King, 31, pleaded quilty Oct. 30 to operating a bawdy house in a city apartment. She was fined $1,500 and ordered to do 200 hours of community work.

Her lawyer, Robert Gardner, said King, who completed the work Nov. 29, found it a "rewarding experience and she benefited from it."

She would now like to find a job, he said, but is finding it difficult in the Vancouver area. King would not say where she is going.

Science illiterates

VANCOUVER (CP) — Canada has become a nation of scientific illiterates because the nation's contributions to science have been underplayed, says a report prepared for the Science Council of Canada.

The discussion paper says at fault is the school system, the universities and the science community.

It calls for more Canadian content in the school science curriculum, greater public knowledge of the history of science and technology in Canada, more Canadian-oriented and produced science textbooks, greater teacher education in the sciences and increased public awareness of the role of science.

Juan de Fuca ship control set

OTTAWA (CP) — A joint United States-Canada agreement for controlling vessel traffic in Juan de Fuca Strait on the West Coast was signed Wednesday by External Affairs Minister Flora MacDonald and U.S. Ambassador Kenneth Curtis.

The agreement, which was to have been signed during President Jimmy Carter's planned trip here in November, provides for joint control of ship and oil tanker traffic in the narrow Juan de Fuca and Puget Sound waters. Ottawa has been particularly concerned about possible oil spills here.

Miss MacDonald said the joint management approach is "one of the most advanced systems for marine safety to be found anywhere in the world." Curtis called it a "model to other nations."

The agreement signing was delayed when Carter cancelled his Ottawa trip because of the Iranian hostage crisis.

Under the joint system, a number of one-way traffic lanes are outlined on U.S. and Canadian nautical charts. Vessels moving within zones report by radio to vessel traffic management centres which provide weather and navigational information.

Vessel traffic management centres on Vancouver Island and in Vancouver and Seattle will handle these ship movements. Ships will travel into Juan de Fuca Strait in U.S. waters and out through Canadian waters.

About three or four oil tankers a day move through these waters as well as 55 to 65 ships of other kinds.

Talks on joint vessel traffic management began in the 1960s and gained momentum in the 1970s with discussion of a West Coast tanker route to haul Alaskan oil to the southern 48 states.

Canada is completing radar stations and communications links at Amphitrite Point on Vancouver Island and at Vancouver at a cost of $18 million. American authorities are expected to finish a $15 million system on the U.S. side in 1981.

$21M VGH bid lowest

A bid of $20,972,236 by Dawson and Hall is the lowest of five bids received for construction of the diagnostic and treatment wing of the new Victoria General Hospital on Helmcken Road.

The Capital Regional District's hospital board must now decide whether to accept it or negotiate for a lower price.

The board has 30 days to make a decision and is not obligated to accept the lowest or any of the bids.

Farmer Construction of Victoria bid $21,029,818, Cana Construction of Vancouver and Victoria bid $21,452,100, PCL Construction of Vancouver bid $21,576,900 and Northern Construction of Vancouver, $21,025,600.

The wing is the most expensive component of the new $46 million hospital and board members said the bids are reasonably close to original cost estimates.

Construction is expected to take 2½ years.

Cana Lab's bid of $905,884.82 was the lowest of two bids received for food service equipment for the new hospital.

Russell Food Equipment submitted a bid of $922,950.

Qualified praise for Stalin

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet news agency Novosti, marking the 100th anniversary this Friday of Joseph Stalin's birth, says his "errors and blunders" led to "mass-scale repressions" but that it is "impossible to deny the positive contribution" he made.

The Novosti article, by political writer Gennady Gerasimov, appears to be more critical of Stalin than official commentaries marking his 90th birth anniversary a decade ago.

But citing the need for "historical objectivity," Gerasimov writes that Stalin ruled during a difficult period when foreign and domestic counter-revolutionaries tried to undermine the Bolshevik revolution and Hitler's armies invaded the Soviet Union.

"The situation called for centralized leadership and discipline and certain restrictions of democracy and unity in the face of a formidable enemy," the commentary says.

The official Communist party newspaper Pravda is expected to issue the principal commentary later this week on the man who ruled the Soviet Union from 1928 until his death in 1953.

Novosti is officially described as a non-government news agency, although its material usually reflects official Soviet policy. The government news agency Tass has not yet commented on the Stalin anniversary.

Gerasimov notes Vladimir Lenin's famous "deathbed testament" in 1922, in which the founder of the Soviet state criticized Stalin's character. Stalin's successor in power, Nikita Khrushchev, referred to the testament in his 1956 speech attacking Stalin's policies.

"As time went on, Stalin found himself to be, in fact, beyond criticism, and his suspiciousness created a conducive environment for violations of legality," the Novosti article says. "He made theoretical mistakes, committed acts of voluntarism and political blunders."

"Voluntarism" is a Soviet term referring to attempts to make great accomplishments without the proper ideological or material basis. Western scholars estimate up to 20 million people died between 1930 and 1950 as Stalin consolidated his own power in the Communist party and party control over the country, forced peasants into collective farms and lashed out at real and imagined enemies.

The commentary insists, however, that "numerous measures have been taken in this country for developing Soviet democracy and strictly observing socialist legality" since Stalin. "History has turned over a new leaf," Gerasimov writes.

Gerasimov says "all this is a past period in the life of our country," and accuses Western experts on the Soviet Union of emphasizing Stalin's failings as part of a "current anti-Soviet policy."

Have sex with wife, court rules

HAIFA, Israel (Reuter) — A rabbinical court Wednesday ordered an Israeli school teacher to have sexual relations with his wife or pay a weekly fine of 36 pieces of gold until he does so.

It declared him a "rebellious husband" after the wife complained he had not slept with her for one year.

The teacher said he stopped because "I got fed up."

The couple was not named.

The value of gold was not defined but the Hebrew term used — which is based on rabbinical tradition — means each piece is the size of a barleycorn.

Soviet activist gets jail term

MOSCOW (AP) — Yuri Litvin, a Ukrainian human rights activist, has been sentenced to three years at hard labor for resisting authority, dissident spokesman Andrei Sakharov said today.

Sakharov, a physicist and Nobel Peace Prize winner, said Litvin was sentenced Monday in Kiev. He said the charge related to an incident Aug. 6 when Litvin was called for questioning by police.

Science fiction writer Oles Berdnik, another Ukrainian human rights activist, went on trial Monday on charges of slandering Soviet society, Sakharov said. He could be sentenced to seven years in prison.

On Wednesday, a Leningrad court convicted the 20-year-old son of self-exiled chess champion Viktor Korchnoi on draft-dodging charges. The court sentenced Igor Korchnoi to 2½ years in a labor camp.

Korchnoi's father, who lives in Switzerland, said today he would ask the International Court of Justice in The Hague to revoke the sentence.

He said the conviction had dashed hopes of getting his family out of Russia in the near future.

The chess grandmaster, who defected two years ago, denied Soviet claims that his son had avoided military service.

"It is a typical punishment," he said. "It has nothing whatever to do with the military draft. Igor has been punished because his father decided to defect."

In Prague, Czechoslovak police today detained two French citizens trying to attend a court appeal by six dissidents convicted and jailed last October for subversion.

Lawyer Elizabeth Guyot and journalist Jean-Jacques Marie, who works for the Czechoslovak emigre paper Listy, were detained as they tried to enter the Supreme Court building.

Police later detained British lawyer John Platts-Mills and Henry Goldmann, a representative of the Austrian section of the human-rights organization Amnesty International.

Fellow Catholics back Kung

WASHINGTON (AP) — A group of Canadian and U.S. Roman Catholic theologians has issued a statement of support for Rev. Hans Kung, a liberal theologian stripped of his teaching post by the Vatican.

The statement was drafted by Rev. Charles Curran of Catholic University in Washington, Rev. Leonard Swidler of Temple University in Philadelphia and Rev. David Tracy of the University of Chicago Divinity School. It has been signed by 70 theologians.

The one-sentence statement says that while "no one of us necessarily agrees with the opinions on particular issues of any other Roman Catholic scholar including Hans Kung, (we) publicly affirm our recognition that Hans Kung is indeed a Roman Catholic theologian."

The Vatican Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, once the Inquisition, stripped Kung of his teaching post in an action approved by Pope John Paul. The Congregation accused the Swiss theologian of teaching false beliefs, such as the denial of church infallibility. Kung has defied the order and continued lecturing at West Germany's University of Tuebingen.

Among the Canadian theologians who signed the statement are Gregory Baum, St. Michael's, Toronto; Bernard Cooke, University of Calgary and Michael Fahey, Concordia University, Montreal

The Vatican, meanwhile, expects West German bishops to handle the case involving Kung.

The sources, who asked to remain anonymous, said it is up to the German Episcopal Conference, the organization of German prelates, to see that the Vatican order is carried out.

They said the Vatican will interfere again only if Kung continues to be defiant and his case becomes bigger that it is.

Meanwhile in Naples, a liberal Roman Catholic organization bitterly criticized the Pope over the Kung case.

The organization, the National Christian Community, said the decision showed a return by the Pope to a "dangerous and anti-evangelical authoritarianism far from the spirit of the second Vatican ecumenical council."

The organization is composed of a number of small Roman Catholic groups scattered throughout Italy.

Park's assassins to die

SEOUL (AP) — President Park Chung-hee's assassin today received the death sentence he asked for, but the military court rejected his plea for clemency for the "innocent sheep" who joined him in the slaying and sentenced six of them to share his fate.

"I am happy to have found good cause for death, and I do not want to beg for my life," the former chief of the Korean Central Intelligence Agency, Kim Jae-kyu, told the five officers of the court martial in his final statement.

The court found Kim, five of his KCIA men and Park's secretary, Kim Kae-won, guilty of the Oct. 26 assassination of South Korea's authoritarian president and five of his bodyguards. The court immediately sentenced the seven men to die.

Kim Jae-kyu shot to death Park and the president's chief bodyguard during a dinner attended also by Kim Kae-won while the KCIA agents gunned down the president's other bodyguards in an adjoining room.

The former KCIA chief testified that it was "heartbreaking" for him to kill the president but he did it to restore democracy to South Korea.

Park seized power in a military coup 18 years ago and rewrote the constitution in 1972 to ensure his continued one-man rule. A clique of army officers has pushed its candidates into key cabinet posts in an apparent bid to continue Park's hardline policies.

Opening lead — queen of spades.

There are some falsecards that must be made as a matter of self protection. The opportunity to make such plays — called mandatory falsecards — seldom arises, but when it does it may well prove suicidal to fail to falsecard. Here is a typical case.

East, the hero of this piece, is defending against four hearts and wins the third round of spades with the ace. He returns a club, which South wins in dummy with the queen.

Declarer returns the four of hearts and our hero, East, plays the king on it, not the ten. When South wins the king with the ace and returns a low trump, West following low, South comes face to face with a difficult problem.

If he assumes the king is a singleton, it becomes vital to play the nine from dummy to prevent West from winning a trump trick with his presumed holding of 10-8-7-2. Actually it would be normal for declarer to finesse the nine on this basis and go down one. But if he sizes up the situation correctly, South goes up with the jack, spearing the ten, and so makes the contract.

The point is that if East plays the ten on the four, South will surely finesse the queen and make four hearts. East has no chance whatever if he woodenly plays the ten. But if he plays the king, he presents declarer with a problem that is not easy to solve.

By falsecarding and pretending he was dealt the lone king, East creates a situation that would simply not arise if he played the ten. To have any chance whatever to survive, he must make the mandatory falsecard of the king.

IF DECEMBER 21 IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are personable, have fine sense of humor and you can express yourself in artistic manner. You are more aware of weight, body image than is the average person. Travel, publishing and interest in spiritual matters could play major roles in your life. Gemini and Sagittarius persons seem to turn up at memorable moments. Persons who are attracted to you usually are bright, restless, versatile and creative. March and December could be your most significant months of 1980. It is not likely that any two people would describe you in the same way. It is not always easy for you to actually know yourself. Your lifestyle changes next year—you could leave current residence.

Rain, rain, rain

More rain and no sign of snow for Christmas.

That's the gloomy weather outlook following a week of heavy rain which brought flooding to the Lower Mainland and areas of Vancouver Island.

Skiers and snowbunnies looking for fresh cover will have to go at least to 4,000-foot levels.

A lull in the wet weather overnight Wednesday was to end today with showers tonight. The forecast is for clouds with rain Friday, Saturday, Sunday and Christmas Eve.

The weather office said moist, warm air coming off the Pacific is one more wave in the southwesterly pattern of the last 10 days.

However, temperatures will remain in the range of 6-12 degrees.

Meanwhile, effects of the heavy rain are still being felt on the mainland where slides are a threat to railways, highways and houses.

Four trainmen were injured when tons of mud and rock slid from a mountainside and buried the tail end of a freight train making its way through the Fraser Canyon on Wednesday.

A CP Rail spokesman said the extent of the men's injuries was not known. Two were taken by helicopter to hospital in Hope, while the other two were taken by ambulance to Lytton, about 25 kilometres west of the slide site on the railway's main line.

All four men were riding in the caboose of the 60-car, eastbound freight when the slide occurred. The slide also buried three flatcars in front of the caboose and blocked more than 150 metres of track.

The railway spokesman said crews were at the scene, but it was not known how long it would take to reopen the line.

While rock and mud slides in the Fraser Canyon severed the city's rail link with the rest of Canada, there was some good news for Vancouver residents who have been deluged by heavy rain for about a week.

Signs that the worst appears to be over came when nearly all flood victims who fled their houses in the southwestern mainland and near Nanaimo during the past few days were allowed to return Wednesday.

The canyon slide closed the only mainline track still operating in the province.

All of that glass isn't necessary

Heating the amateur's greenhouse at reasonable cost has been the subject in recent columns.

Continuing this theme, we take a look at a greenhouse, small in size and of wood and glass construction, having a propagating bench along one side with one or two buried soil heating cables.

A small greenhouse used mainly for rooting cuttings and germinating seeds need not have glass to the foundation. It is more practical to have wood sides and ends from bench level to foundation.

Few of the knock-down greenhouse kits are designed this way, but the handyman has overcome the problem by applying shiplap to the inside of the side bars and filling the space between glass and wood with insulation batts, vapor barrier side to the glass. This lessens the area of glass and reduces heat loss.

Using this method, I have capped the insulated area with strips of three-ply sloping inwards and sealed the edge at the glass with caulking compound. This "roof" deflects the condensation droplets that run down the glass and prevent saturating the insulation material.

Thermostatically-controlled soil heating cables are usually operated at temperatures from 10 to 20 degrees C, and are in operation over late fall and early winter for cuttings and mid- to late-winter for both slow-rooting cuttings and seed germination.

It does not take many days of operation to warm the soil and the bench to a point where it begins to radiate heat to the surrounding air, and by this time of year the radiation is sufficient to maintain a greenhouse temperature in the range of 5 to 7C on cold nights, the temperature mentioned in a previous column as being a suitable high for most plants grown by the amateur.

Potted plants on shelves, not close enough to the glass for the foliage to be frosted, should thrive well in this atmosphere without any additional heat source, thereby reducing costs and conserving power.

A greenhouse was never intended to be a garden shed for storing children's toys, broken garden furniture and dirty gardening tools.

One sees so many of these neglected structures in residential areas. It is likely some of the owners have met with failures on their first attempt at using a greenhouse, become disillusioned and decided they are incapable of succeeding.

This is definitely not true, but it is true one has to persevere and learn from the errors one makes.

A greenhouse on the property is a valuable asset. Without any form of artificial heating it can be considered a glorified walk-in coldframe where one can work standing up instead of bending or kneeling in the rain.

All things grown in a coldframe can be grown in a cold greenhouse, and the greater volume of enclosed air gives better growing conditions. It is not necessary to be limited to ground beds. A bench in the centre with a walk around, will give warmer conditions than at floor level.

With careful ventilation (plants need fresh air) and restrained watering, that derelict structure could be producing fresh food for the family meals and earning its keep by easing the drain on the food budget.

Think it over, and if you agree, clean up the structure and have it ready for sowing vegetable seeds as the days lengthen in February. Success will give you more ideas to use next fall and winter.

Night classes next month

How to care for a horse, cook Chinese style or draw up a will may be learned at evening classes starting next month in the Saanich school district.

The continuing education program is taking registrations now for a series of classes which start Jan. 14 in various schools of the district lying north of Royal Oak.

Among the offerings are classes on typing, oil painting, auto mechanics, folk guitar, sewing, silk screening and Japanese cooking.

Director Frank G. Baxter said the free law course on wills and estates is already fully subscribed, but there are still vacancies in a one-session course Jan. 29 on the Family Relations Act, which includes division of family assets, child custody and support obligations.

Persons interested in attending that course may register by telephone at the school board office, 656-1111.

Enquiries about other courses may also be made by phone and brochures are available at the school board office in Sidney.

College link soon

The Gulf Islands, Sooke and Saanich school districts will soon have full access to Camosun College services and each district can now name a representative to the college board.

Education Minister Brian Smith said the three, along with the Creston-Kaslo, Kettle Valley, Princeton and Sunshine Coast school districts, are the last of B.C.'s 75 school districts to be officially linked to the province's 14 college regions.

When colleges fell under the Public Schools Act, part of the college costs were paid by participating school districts by local taxation.

The provincial government assumed this portion of college costs during the last sitting of the legislature.

The seven districts will be phased into their respective college regions in the first few months of 1980.

House of Islam, world faith vs. House of War

The events in Iran and other Moslem nations seem beyond comprehension. Following is the first of three articles by the brilliant anthropologist, Dr. Raphael Patai, that go far toward explaining them. Dr. Patai is the author of numerous books on the subject, including The Arab Mind and Society, Culture and Change in the Middle East. He has been professor of anthropology at the University of Pennsylvania, Ohio State, Fairleigh Dickinson and other universities.

By DR. RAPHAEL PATAI

First of all, let us set the facts straight. Not all the Moslems are Arabs and not all the Arabs are Moslems. The religion of the Moslems, Islam, is a world faith, with some 600 million adherents, who constitute the solid majority in 32 countries forming a broad global belt stretching halfway around the earth from the Atlantic coast of Africa to Pakistan, and from Central Asia to the Sahara. In this area, Islam is the religion of some 95 per cent of the population. Farther to the east, in Bangladesh and Indonesia, almost the entire population is Moslem.

The area controlled or dominated by Moslems for centuries has been referred to in Moslem tradition as "the House of Islam." Those parts of the world not ruled by Islam were and are called "the House of War."

These designations are significant because they indicate that in the traditional Moslem view the non-Moslem world comprised that part of mankind with which Islam was in a state of conflict, and which to conquer in a holy war, a "jihad," was one of the basic Moslem religious commandments.

Islam, founded by the Arabian Prophet Mohammed (570-632), is based on the "Five Pillars of the Faith": The witnessing of the oneness of Allah, five daily prayers, fasting in the month of Ramadham; pilgrimage to Mecca, and almsgiving. According to some, the jihad is the sixth pillar of Islam.

Of the three monotheistic religions — Judaism, Christianity and Islam — Islam is, on the whole, the one which is most able to infuse religious fervor and enthusiasm into its believers. It is the one which, while recognizing the great figures of the Old and New Testaments as prophets of God, most rigidly insists that it alone is the possessor of the true, complete and final revelation of Allah's will.

It is the only major religion which is so rigorously set against the adherents of all other faiths that it permits only Moslems to enter its holy shrine, the sacred mosque of the Ka'aba, and, indeed, excludes non-Moslems from the whole city of Mecca within which that sanctuary is situated. It is a faith which imparts to many more of its adherents an absolute conviction of rightness and an unshakeable belief in reward and punishment in the Other World, than do Judaism and Christianity.

It has had an unparalleled appeal to many races and cultures. It has converted millions of Turkic and Mongoloid peoples in Central Asia and in Southeast Asia, and is still spreading noticeably among Negroid peoples in Central Africa and elsewhere.

With the acquisition of billions by oil-wealthy Arab states, which are more than ever the central factor in the Moslem world, Islam has become a power the world increasingly will have to reckon with.

The Arabs, by their own definition, are those peoples who speak Arabic and who uphold the values of Arab traditions. They predominate across North Africa, the Arabian peninsula and in four states east of the Mediterranean: Syria, Lebanon, Jordan and Iraq.

The total population of the 21 Arab states which form the Arab League is about 160 million. Incidentally, they constitute one of the world areas with the highest natural increase.

While only about 27 per cent of all Moslems are Arabs, no less than 90 percent of all Arabs are Moslems. The rest are Christian Arabs, found primarily in Egypt (where they are known as Copts), and in Lebanon and Syria (where they are divided among many Christian sects).

In every Arab country, the Christian Arab minority has been more urbanized and better educated than the Moslem Arabs and, in recent decades, they have become more Westernized.

At the same time, the Christian Arabs have stood in the vanguard of the Arab nationalist movements in those Arab states which, until the end of the Second World War, had been under British, French, or Italian colonial rule.

The non-Arab Moslem world is vast and varied. The largest, that is, most populous Moslem countries are non-Arab and lie outside the Middle East. By far the largest Moslem population is that of Indonesia, some 90 per cent of whose 145 million inhabitants are Moslem. The second largest is Bangladesh, of whose 85 million inhabitants 85 per cent are Moslems.

Of the Middle Eastern non-Arab Moslem countries, the two most important are Turkey and Iran. Turkey, which in the past ruled over most of the Arab world, since the post-First World War reforms of Kemal Attaturk has become modernized, industrialized and Westernized to such an extent that it now proudly counts itself a European state. (In fact, a small corner of Turkey, with the city of Istanbul, lies in Europe.)

Turkey's population of 45 million is practically entirely Moslem, including some 2.5 million Kurds who live in the southeastern corner of Turkey. Another

OPEC deadlock oil 'free-for-all'

Times News Services

CARACAS — The OPEC oil ministers wound up four frustrating days of negotiations today in a deadlock over a new price for the world's petroleum supply.

The OPEC deadlock could lead to a free-for-all in the world's petroleum market and push up world prices for the precious fuel as chaos continues on the world oil market.

On the basis of positions staked out by both moderate and radical countries at the conference, gasoline consumers around the world can expect to pay higher prices at the pump.

"We did not fix any price," Venezuelan oil minister Humberto Calderon said at the close of the final three-hour session.

Ahmed Zaki Yamani, oil minister of Saudi Arabia, the largest oil exporter in the world, told UPI as he left the conference hall that no progress had been made.

Yamani said there was no general agreement on the OPEC price for crude oil. Asked if the ministers had made any progress toward breaking the deadlock of Wednesday night, he said, "No".

Calderon, who presided over the sessions as host minister, said the oil industry now has no price standard or "marker crude" on which to base a price system.

"Everyone is free to charge what they see fit for the market,", Calderon said. "That situation is no good for us but we prefer this system to a multi-tier price system."

Calderon said Venezuela, which raised its price from $18 to $24 per barrel a week ago along with Saudi Arabia, Qatar and United Arab Emirates, will continue to be a firm source of petroleum for the United States and Latin America.

Prior to today's meeting, there was speculation loose limits might be set, with the bottom basic price expected to be $24 a barrel, $6 more than OPEC's previous minimum set last June and the price Saudi Arabia said it will charge for the first quarter of 1980.

The upper limit was expected to be more than $30, the current maximum base price, which Libya is charging. The Libyans urged a minimun base price of $34 for a 42-gallon barrel. But any ceiling will be junked, just as the $23.50 top set in June was, if the demand for oil exceeds the supply or buyers begin anticipating shortages.

PQ vote wording released

QUEBEC (CP) — The Quebec national assembly gets the long-awaited wording of the PQ govenment's referendum on sovereignty-association today.

Debate on the referendum will be postponed until February, however, when the assembly returns from its Christmas holiday break.

The wording has been the subject of long argument in Quebec, with some opinion polls saying the referendum response could change significantly with fairly minor variations in the text.

But the most recent poll, published last Sunday in the Montreal newspaper Dimanche-Matin, said that even without knowing the question, 45.8 per cent of Quebecers plan to vote no and 20.3 per cent plan to vote yes, while 25.6 per cent said they wanted to wait for the question.

The referendum date won't be announced for some time yet but the vote is expected to be held in May or June.

The 68-member Parti Quebecois caucus was consulted on the wording last week but as of Wednesday still hadn't been told what it would be.

Marguerite stand-in not $½M, but $3M

Transportation Minister Alex Fraser has had some unpleasant financial facts dumped into his lap on the possibility of leasing a vessel to replace the Princess Marguerite in 1980.

After a two-week tour of European shipyards and ship brokers, B.C. Ferry Corp chief of operations George Baldwin has returned with a list of nine possible vessels to be used on the Seattle-Victoria run.

All nine are for sale but only two, both owned by the Stena Line of Sweden, are available for charter.

The cost of chartering is not $500,000 a year as Fraser recently estimated.

It is $3 million a year.

"As a matter of fact, I think the figure is a little higher than $3 million when you work out all the details, delivery costs and so forth," Fraser said today.

Cost of buying one of the ships outright ranges from $12 million to $25 million, Fraser said.

Baldwin reported to the B.C. Ferry Corp board of directors on Wednesday but no conclusion was reached on a replacement vessel.

Fraser said a final decision must be made by the end of January.

"At least now we have all the facts," the minister said.

CP pays $3M

TORONTO (CP) — CP Rail has paid about $3 million to Mississauga, Ont., evacuees who have claimed out-of-pocket expenses for the six days following a Nov. 10 train derailment of cars carrying chlorine and propane.

The company has honored about 16,000 claims covering about 50,000 people.

Who's gonna win the West?

Canadian Press

The country's political leaders have converged on Western Canada, anxious to impress upon voters there the importance each attaches to the region in the campaign leading up to the Feb. 18 election. (More detailed election coverage appears today on pages 28 and 29).

Pierre Trudeau was in Winnipeg today trying to make good on his promise to make the four western provinces more at home within the Liberal party by inaugurating his fifth election campaign in that city.

In Vancouver, Prime Minister Clark continued his western swing with a board of trade speech outling Conservative government thinking on the best way to turn over the assets of Petro-Canada, the state oil company, to the private sector.

Clark was also told today that Eldon Woolliams, veteran Progressive Conservative MP passed over by Prime Minister Clark when he made up his first cabinet, will not run in the Feb. 18 election.

Ed Broadbent, leader of the New Democratic Party, was also due in Winnipeg to address high school students before flying to Vancouver.

Trudeau is making his first campaign appearance with a group of Prairie Liberals meeting to thrash out an election strategy for the West.

The Trudeau-led Liberals elected only three MPs west of Ontario during the May 22 election and the former prime minister says he is determined to show the West the Liberals care about its problems.

The Liberals lost two familiar faces Wednesday when both James Jerome and Donald Macdonald announced that they would not be running.

Broadbent spent Wednesday hammering away at the Clark government's energy policies, especially their effect on Quebec and Atlantic Canada.

Socred staff to be replaced

Social Credit party caucus head Jack Kempf said Wednesday he has started accepting applications for a new caucus research team to start work before the spring session of the legislature.

Earlier this month, Kempf fired the entire research staff and announced that he and his fellow Socred MLAs had decided unanimously to "restructure and reorganize support staff responsibility" in the government's caucus office.

The research function, as such, he said, was being phased out.

Kempf denied at the time the mass firing had anything to do with the "dirty tricks" affair which involved some research workers advising Socred party members to fake letters to newspapers.

It's not known if former researchers Ellen McKay and Jack Kelly, who figured prominently in the letters case, will be applying for jobs.

Kempf said Wednesday speculation that the top research job would pay $40,000 a year is just a rumor.

New blow for ferry union

The strife-torn 2,700-member B.C. Ferry and Marine Workers Union has been dealt another blow with the resignation of Tsawwassen chairman Steve Lomax who represents 350 members in the union's largest local.

Lomax said Wednesday he quit because he could no longer act under the leadership of president Shirley Mathieson.

His resignation is the latest in a two-year history of internal struggles involving top union officials and members of the executive.

In an attempt to salvage union unity, the union has asked the Canadian Labor Congress to place it under trusteeship.

Lomax's resignation leaves two of the union's largest units without local representation. Robin Holmgren, Departure Bay chairman, was dismissed by a majority of the executive for suspected involvement in a Sept. 6 unauthorized work stoppage which the provincial Labor Relations Board is currently investigating.

Holmgren says the constitution provides that only the membership of the local can remove a chairman and he wants a vote of confidence from the local membership.

Lomax said Ms. Mathieson has forced the union down a road of chaos because she refused to work with many executive members.

"We are in total chaos and she led us down that route. She created it by refusing to work with executive members. As soon as anyone questions union direction they are classed as dissidents," he said.

Ms. Mathieson says much of the union's internal bickering is caused by business agent Matt Brown, who she said ran an unsuccessful slate during the last convention in February.

A 15-member committee is calling for a special convention to enable members to re-affirm their support in the existing union leadership. The group says it has collected more than 700 names on a petition calling for a convention to be held next spring, one year earlier than scheduled. The union constitution says at least one third of the membership has to support a special convention before one can be called.

In this area, Islam is the religion of some 95 per cent of the population. Farther to the east, in Bangladesh and Indonesia, almost the entire population is Moslem.

The area controlled or dominated by Moslems for centuries has been referred to in Moslem tradition as "the House of Islam." Those parts of the world not ruled by Islam were and are called "the House of War."

These designations are significant because they indicate that in the traditional Moslem view the non-Moslem world comprised that part of mankind with which Islam was in a state of conflict, and which to conquer in a holy war, a "jihad," was one of the basic Moslem religious commandments.

Islam, founded by the Arabian Prophet Mohammed (570-632), is based on the "Five Pillars of the Faith": The witnessing of the oneness of Allah, five daily prayers, fasting in the month of Ramadham; pilgrimage to Mecca, and almsgiving. According to some, the jihad is the sixth pillar of Islam.

Of the three monotheistic religions — Judaism, Christianity and Islam — Islam is, on the whole, the one which is most able to infuse religious fervor and enthusiasm into its believers. It is the one which, while recognizing the great figures of the Old and New Testaments as prophets of God, most rigidly insists that it alone is the possessor of the true, complete and final revelation of Allah's will.

It is the only major religion which is so rigorously set against the adherents of all other faiths that it permits only Moslems to enter its holy shrine, the sacred mosque of the Ka'aba, and, indeed, excludes non-Moslems from the whole city of Mecca within which that sanctuary is situated. It is a faith which imparts to many more of its adherents an absolute conviction of rightness and an unshakeable belief in reward and punishment in the Other World, than do Judaism and Christianity.

It has had an unparalleled appeal to many races and cultures. It has converted millions of Turkic and Mongoloid peoples in Central Asia and in Southeast Asia, and is still spreading noticeably among Negroid peoples in Central Africa and elsewhere.

With the acquisition of billions by oil-wealthy Arab states, which are more than ever the central factor in the Moslem world, Islam has become a power the world increasingly will have to reckon with.

The Arabs, by their own definition, are those peoples who speak Arabic and who uphold the values of Arab traditions. They predominate across North Africa, the Arabian peninsula and in four states east of the Mediterranean: Syria, Lebanon, Jordan and Iraq.

The total population of the 21 Arab states which form the Arab League is about 160 million. Incidentally, they constitute one of the world areas with the highest natural increase.

While only about 27 per cent of all Moslems are Arabs, no less than 90 per cent of all Arabs are Moslems. The rest are Christian Arabs, found primarily in Egypt (where they are known as Copts), and in Lebanon and Syria (where they are divided among many Christian sects).

In every Arab country, the Christian Arab minority has been more urbanized and better educated than the Moslem Arabs and, in recent decades, they have become more Westernized.

At the same time, the Christian Arabs have stood in the vanguard of the Arab nationalist movements in those Arab states which, until the end of the Second World War, had been under British, French, or Italian colonial rule.

The non-Arab Moslem world is vast and varied. The largest, that is, most populous Moslem countries are non-Arab and lie outside the Middle East. By far the largest Moslem population is that of Indonesia, some 90 per cent of whose 145 million inhabitants are Moslem. The second largest is Bangladesh, of whose 85 million inhabitants 85 per cent are Moslems.

Of the Middle Eastern non-Arab Moslem countries, the two most important are Turkey and Iran. Turkey, which in the past ruled over most of the Arab world, since the post-First World War reforms of Kemal Attaturk has become modernized, industrialized and Westernized to such an extent that it now proudly counts itself a European state. (In fact, a small corner of Turkey, with the city of Istanbul, lies in Europe.)

Turkey's population of 45 million is practically entirely Moslem, including some 2.5 million Kurds who live in the southeastern corner of Turkey. Another

Que. referendum wording drafted

QUEBEC (CP) — Premier Rene Levesque today presented the Quebec national assembly with the long-awaited wording of the sovereignty-association referendum.

Quebecers will be asked in next spring's vote to give the Quebec government a mandate to negotiate sovereignty-association with the rest of Canada.

But voters have been assured that independence will not take place until the holding of a second referendum.

The question, unveiled by Premier Rene Levesque in the national assembly today, includes a three-paragraph preamble which says the Quebec government "has made public its proposal to negotiate a new agreement with the rest of Canada."

The agreement, the question continues, would "enable Quebec to acquire the exclusive power to make its laws, administer its taxes and establish relations abroad — in other words, sovereignty — and at the same time, to maintain with Canada an economic association including a common currency."

And in a key phrase, the preamble includes the following words: "Any change in political status resulting from these negotiations will be submitted to the people through a referendum."

It ends with the specific question: "On these terms, do you agree to give the government of Quebec the mandate to negotiate the proposed agreement between Quebec and Canada?"

The voters will be asked to respond with a Yes or No to the question.

The question will be subject to a 35-hour debate in the national assembly in February. The referendum itself will probably take place in May or June.

The wording has been the subject of long argument in Quebec, with some opinion polls saying the referendum response could change significantly with fairly minor variations in the text.

The 68-member Parti Quebecois caucus was consulted on the wording last week but as of Wednesday still hadn't been told what it would be.

Chaos looms for oil

Times News Services

CARACAS — The OPEC oil ministers wound up four frustrating days of negotiations today in a deadlock over a new price for the world's petroleum supply.

The OPEC deadlock could lead to a free-for-all in the world's petroleum market and push up world prices for the precious fuel as chaos continues on the world oil market.

On the basis of positions staked out by both moderate and radical countries at the conference, gasoline consumers around the world can expect to pay higher prices at the pump.

"We did not fix any price," Venezuelan oil minister Humberto Calderon said at the close of the final three-hour session.

Ahmed Zaki Yamani, oil minister of Saudi Arabia, the largest oil exporter in the world, said no progress had been made in the final round of talks.

Yamani said there was no general agreement on the OPEC price for crude oil.

Calderon, who presided over the sessions as host minister, said the oil industry now has no price standard or "marker crude" on which to base a price system.

"Everyone is free to charge what they see fit for the market,", Calderon said. "That situation is no good for us but we prefer this system to a multi-tier price system."

Marguerite stand-in not $½M, but $3M

Transportation Minister Alex Fraser has had some unpleasant financial facts dumped into his lap on the possibility of leasing a vessel to replace the Princess Marguerite in 1980.

After a two-week tour of European shipyards and ship brokers, B.C. Ferry Corp chief of operations George Baldwin has returned with a list of nine possible vessels to be used on the Seattle-Victoria run.

All nine are for sale but only two, both owned by the Stena Line of Sweden, are available for charter.

The cost of chartering is not $500,000 a year as Fraser recently estimated.

It is $3 million a year.

"As a matter of fact, I think the figure is a little higher than $3 million when you work out all the details, delivery costs and so forth," Fraser said today.

Cost of buying one of the ships outright ranges from $12 million to $25 million, Fraser said.

Baldwin reported to the B.C. Ferry Corp board of directors on Wednesday but no conclusion was reached on a replacement vessel.

Fraser said a final decision must be made by the end of January.

"At least now we have all the facts," the minister said.

CP pays $3M

TORONTO (CP) — CP Rail has paid about $3 million to Mississauga, Ont., evacuees who have claimed out-of-pocket expenses for the six days following a Nov. 10 train derailment of cars carrying chlorine and propane.

The company has honored about 16,000 claims covering about 50,000 people.

Who's gonna win the West?

Canadian Press

The country's political leaders have converged on Western Canada, anxious to impress upon voters there the importance each attaches to the region in the campaign leading up to the Feb. 18 election. (More detailed election coverage appears today on pages 28 and 29).

Pierre Trudeau was in Winnipeg today trying to make good on his promise to make the four western provinces more at home within the Liberal party by inaugurating his fifth election campaign in that city.

In Vancouver, Prime Minister Clark continued his western swing with a board of trade speech outling Conservative government thinking on the best way to turn over the assets of Petro-Canada, the state oil company, to the private sector.

Clark was also told today that Eldon Woolliams, veteran Progressive Conservative MP passed over by Prime Minister Clark when he made up his first cabinet, will not run in the Feb. 18 election.

Ed Broadbent, leader of the New Democratic Party, was also due in Winnipeg to address high school students before flying to Vancouver.

Trudeau is making his first campaign appearance with a group of Prairie Liberals meeting to thrash out an election strategy for the West.

The Trudeau-led Liberals elected only three MPs west of Ontario during the May 22 election and the former prime minister says he is determined to show the West the Liberals care about its problems.

The Liberals lost two familiar faces Wednesday when both James Jerome and Donald Macdonald announced that they would not be running.

Broadbent spent Wednesday hammering away at the Clark government's energy policies, especially their effect on Quebec and Atlantic Canada.

ORDER OF CANADA has been bestowed on Unitarian Service Committee founder Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova, well-known to Greater Victorians for her fund-raising activities for needy around the world.

Socred staff to be replaced

Social Credit party caucus head Jack Kempf said Wednesday he has started accepting applications for a new caucus research team to start work before the spring session of the legislature.

Earlier this month, Kempf fired the entire research staff and announced that he and his fellow Socred MLAs had decided unanimously to "restructure and reorganize support staff responsibility" in the government's caucus office.

The research function, as such, he said, was being phased out.

Kempf denied at the time the mass firing had anything to do with the "dirty tricks" affair which involved some research workers advising Socred party members to fake letters to newspapers.

It's not known if former researchers Ellen McKay and Jack Kelly, who figured prominently in the letters case, will be applying for jobs.

Kempf said Wednesday speculation that the top research job would pay $40,000 a year is just a rumor.

New blow for ferry union

The strife-torn 2,700-member B.C. Ferry and Marine Workers Union has been dealt another blow with the resignation of Tsawwassen chairman Steve Lomax who represents 350 members in the union's largest local.

Lomax said Wednesday he quit because he could no longer act under the leadership of president Shirley Mathieson.

His resignation is the latest in a two-year history of internal struggles involving top union officials and members of the executive.

In an attempt to salvage union unity, the union has asked the Canadian Labor Congress to place it under trusteeship.

Lomax's resignation leaves two of the union's largest units without local representation. Robin Holmgren, Departure Bay chairman, was dismissed by a majority of the executive for suspected involvement in a Sept. 6 unauthorized work stoppage which the provincial Labor Relations Board is currently investigating.

Holmgren says the constitution provides that only the membership of the local can remove a chairman and he wants a vote of confidence from the local membership.

Lomax said Ms. Mathieson has forced the union down a road of chaos because she refused to work with many executive members.

"We are in total chaos and she led us down that route. She created it by refusing to work with executive members. As soon as anyone questions union direction they are classed as dissidents," he said.

Ms. Mathieson says much of the union's internal bickering is caused by business agent Matt Brown, who she said ran an unsuccessful slate during the last convention in February.

A 15-member committee is calling for a special convention to enable members to reaffirm their support in the existing union leadership. The group says it has collected more than 700 names on a petition calling for a convention to be held next spring, one year earlier than scheduled. The union constitution says at least one third of the membership has to support a special convention before one can be called.
